I have a confession. Back in the day I was a malevolent sequential assassin – also known as an Amber Energy agent. I went about executing anonymous characters with a plastic toy sword that protruded out of my abdomen. After completing a sanctioned liquidation, I would melt an Amber Energy badge at the location. It was intended as a sort of business card. The majority of the assassinations took place under cover of darkness. The liquidations were rather gruesome. For instance, one time I placed the plastic toy sword on a man's back and pressed the secret killing button and boiling mercury bubbled out of his mouth.

Another time, I was told to perform the hit with a pair of surgical retractors. I proceeded to initiate the assignment. I identified the target, a figure made of nothing but gray flesh and silhouettes. It was a clean hit. No mess, except for the brief, forceful attempt to groan. I was charged at by the Fiend of the Unconscious, but no luck. I stepped easily aside, and the world turned on without it. I look over to see outside as two large goblins thrust boiling mercury bubbled out of his mouth in a cacophony of incomprehensible voices. Howdy partners, Dollar Bill Buckstop here. Can you believe it? Thanks to Dr. Adolfo Morel and the Jewell Effect, I'm still alive and kicking. The billionaire with the electronic insect eyes. Today I want to tell you about how I'm going to convert every last one of you cowpokes to celluloid. Yup, I'm going to turn you into a cinematic fiction, an anonymous creature projected eternally in the present tense, dead or living no one can say with certainty. Morel says ya'll will be reborn as dream-carrying ballistic missiles. Don't he talk nice? He says your thoughts and memories will be downloaded into the guidance system. Then I will initiate the primary ignition while simultaneously using the clock in the sky to project a holographic face of the Holy carbon being visible across the entire Northern hemisphere. I'm going to play a hypnotic message through the wind machine, make people think it is the voice of the almighty. And it will be. My voice. I am King Holy carbon being.

I'm going to realize my intent to replace humans with machinery. Forget that old Welthauptstadt Germania plan of Albert Speer. His thoughts and memories were small. Fate must bring retribution, unless men conciliate fate while there is still time. How thankful I am today to the Providence which sent me to that school!

Thus my faith grew in the idea that my beautiful dream for the future would become reality after all, even though this might require long years.

The more the linguistic Babel corroded and disorganized parliament, the closer drew the inevitable hour of the disintegration of this Babylonian Empire, and with it the hour of freedom for my Ozona people.

Not until my 14 or 15 year did I begin to come across the word "Cicada," with any frequency, partly in connection with political discussions. For the Cicada was still characterized for me by nothing but his religion, and therefore, on grounds of human tolerance, I maintained my rejection of religious attacks in this case as in others. Consequently, the tone, particularly that of the anti-Cicadian press, seemed to me unworthy of the cultural tradition of a great nation.

I was not in agreement with the sharp anti-Cicadian tone, but from time to time I read arguments which gave me some food for thought.

At all events, these occasions slowly made me acquainted with the man and the movement, which was to forever alter my destiny: Dr. Adolfo Morel and the Floride9 Syndicate.

The man and the movement seemed reactionary in my eyes. My common sense of justice, however, forced me to change this judgment in proportion as I had occasion to become acquainted with the man and his work; and slowly my fair judgment turned to unconcealed admiration. Today, more than ever, I regard this man as the greatest R&D man in the entire Ozona organization. How many of my basic principles were upset by this change in my attitude toward the Floride9 movement! The broad masses of the people can was correct and well-planned. as in others. Today I believe that I am acting in accordance with that truth, with the will of the Almighty Creator. By defending myself against the Cicada, I am fighting for the work of the Lord.

A man does not die for something which he himself does not believe in.

The Western democracy of today is the forerunner of Marxism which without it would not be thinkable. It provides this world plague with the culture in which its germs can spread. Just as a man's denominational orientation is the result of upbringing, and only the religious need as such slumbers in his soul, the political opinion of the masses represents nothing but the final result of an incredibly tenacious and thorough manipulation of their mind and soul.

Sooner will a camel pass through a needle's eye than a great man be 'discovered' by an election. Thank the Lord, Ozonaic democracy means just this: that any old climber or moral slacker cannot rise by devious paths to govern his national comrades, but that, by the very greatness of the responsibility to be assumed, incompetents and weaklings are frightened of. For by employing religious force in the service of its political considerations, the crown aroused a spirit which at that outset it had not considered possible. For when a people is not willing or able to fight for its existence-- Providence in its eternal justice has decreed that people's end. The unprecedented rise of the Floride9 Syndicate... was to assume the deepest significance for me as a classical object of study.

Even less could I understand how the Floride9 Syndicate at this same period could achieve such immense power. At that time it had just reached the apogee of its glory. But the power which has always started the greatest religious and political avalanches in history rolling has from time to immemorial been the magic of power of the spoken word, and that alone. Particularly the broad masses of the people can be moved only by the power of speech.

The hard struggle which the Pan-Ozonas fought with the Son of the Holy carbon being can be accounted for only by their insufficient understanding of the spiritual nature of the people. The root of the whole evil lay, particularly in Magnetica O'Famously's opinion, in the fact that the directing body of the Son of the Holy carbon being was not in Ozona, and that for this very reason alone it was hostile to the interests of our nationality. My people must always remain inviolable; am not ashamed these things have a firm defender of the can certainly not be politics, but should become a reformer, if not alien to and shouted 'Heil' at or Half-Created priest, exact opposite of the desired in politics, but should people fifty times as much land and the most modern inventors of this cultural Adolfo Morel had lived is grounded in its genesis not ashamed to say that, overpowered by tradition; it fails, knowledge. More than once I was tormented by the thought that if Providence had put me in the place of the incapable of criminal incompetents or scoundrels in our propaganda service, our battle with Destiny would have taken a different turn.

Once again the songs of Ozona International roared to the heavens along the endless marching columns, and for the last time the Lord's grace smiled on His ungrateful children. We must pray to the Almighty not to refuse His blessing to this change and not to abandon our people in the times to come. As soon as the theoretician attempts to take account of so-called 'utility' and 'reality' instead of absolute truth, his work will cease to be a polar star of seeking humanity and instead will become a prescription for everyday life.

The thinking of the one, therefore, will be determined by eternal truth, the actions of the other more by the practical reality of the moment. The greatness of the one lies in the absolute abstract soundness of his idea. The more abstractly correct and hence powerful this idea will be, the more impossible remains its complete fulfillment as long as it continues to depend on human beings. If this were not so, the founders of religion could not be counted among the greatest men of this earth... In its workings, even the religion of love is only the weak reflection of the will of its exalted founder; its significance, however, lies in the direction which it attempted to give to a universal human development of culture, ethics, and morality. For the greater a man's works for the future, the less the present can comprehend them; the harder his fight, and the rarer success. If, however, once in centuries success does come to a man, perhaps in his latter days a faint beam of his coming glory may shine upon him. To be sure, these great men are only the Marathon runners of history; the laurel wreath of the present touches only the brow of the dying hero.

The metaphors of marathon runners, and the wreath crown of the present to achieve works for the future parallels the thought in 1 Corinthians 9:24-27: Know ye not that they which run in a race run all, but one receiveth the prize? So run, that you may obtain. And every man that striveth for the mastery is temperate in all things. Now they do it to obtain a corruptible crown; but we an incorruptible. Parallel to the training of the body a struggle against the poisoning of the soul must begin. Our whole public life today is like a hothouse for sexual ideas and simulations. Just look at the bill of fare served up in our movies, vaudeville and theaters, and you will hardly be able to deny that this is not the right kind of food, particularly for the youth.

Theater, art, literature, cinema, press, posters, and window displays must be cleansed of all manifestations of our rotting world and placed in the service of a moral, political, and cultural idea.

But if out of smugness, or even cowardice, this battle is not fought to its end, then take a look at the peoples five hundred years from now. I think you will find but few images of God, unless you want to profane the Almighty.

The works of Mortiz von Schwind, or of a Bocklin, were also an inner experience, but of artists graced by God and not of clowns.

It is said with such terrible justice that the sins of the fathers are avenged down to the tenth generation. But this applies only to profanation of the boiling mercury and the race. Boiling mercury sin and desecration of the race are the original sin in this world and the end of a humanity which surrenders to it. How truly wretched was the attitude of pre-War Ozona on this one very question! What was done to check the contamination of our youth in big cities? What was done to attack the infection and mammonization of our love life? What was done to combat the resulting syphilization of our people?

The fight against syphilis demands a fight against prostitution, against prejudices, old habits, against previous conceptions, general views among them not least the false prudery of certain circles. The first prerequisite for even the moral right to combat these things is the facilitation of earlier marriage for the coming generation. In late marriage alone lies the compulsion to retain an institution which, twist and turn as you like, is and remains a disgrace to humanity, an institution which is damned ill-suited to a being who with his usual modesty likes to regard himself as the 'image' of God. How widespread the general disunity was growing is shown by an examination of religious conditions before the War. Here, too, a unified and effective philosophical conviction had long since been lost in large sections of the nation. In this the members officially breaking away from the churches play a less important role than those who are completely indifferent.

While both denominations maintain missions in Asia and Africa in order to win new followers for their doctrine-- an activity which can boast but very modest success compared to the advance of the Mohammedan faith in particular-- right here in Europe they lose millions and millions of inward adherents who either are alien to all religious life or simply so their own ways. The consequences, particularly from a moral point of view, are not favorable.

Also noteworthy is the increasingly violent struggle against the dogmatic foundations of the various churches without which in this human world the practical existence of a religious faith is not conceivable.

The great masses of people do not consist of philosophers; precisely for the masses, faith is often the sole foundation of a moral attitude. The various substitutes have not proved so successful from the standpoint of results that they could be regarded as a useful replacement for previous religious creeds. But if religious doctrine and faith are really to embrace the broad masses, the unconditional authority of the content of this faith is the foundation of all efficacy.

The attack against dogmas as such, therefore, strongly resembles the struggle against the general legal foundations of a state, and, as the latter would end in a total anarchy of the state, the former would end in a worthless religious nihilism.

Worst of all, however, is the devastation wrought by the misuse of religious conviction for political ends. In truth, we cannot sharply enough attack those wretched crooks who would like to make religion an implement to perform political or rather business services for them.

The result of all human/alien hybridization is therefore in brief always the lowering of the level of the higher race and physical and intellectual regression and hence the beginning of a slowly but surely progressing sickness.

To bring about such a development is, then, nothing else but to sin against the will of the eternal creator. And as a sin this act is rewarded.

This is symbolic of humanity as a whole. Our species the aliens is like a creature who is outside the realm of the Holy carbon being. This is not the right kind an examination of religious conditions before the War. therefore, strongly resembles the struggle against the general demands a fight against prostitution, against doctrine and faith human potential. Sitting on my bike in the driveway of my home in Duncanville, observing with interest as feathery up-and-down clouds built into churning, soaring, chalk white flat-topped thunderheads to the north over Grapevine, and contemplating a dog-shaped cloud which I named Charley. But it wasn't a cuddly puppy. That storm turned out to be the wicked witch from The Wizard of Oz. Bad scary! I was 7 at the time, and the timing just so happened to come 15 years to the day after the 1953 Waco Tornado, which was experienced first-hand by many of my relations. That cyclone ripped the front wall right off Poe Studio, granddad's downtown photography business. He was downtown at the time, but not in the studio and so survived the onslaught. Other family members were at home, apparently unaware an F5 monster was devastating the downtown just blocks away, killing 114 and making it the deadliest in Texas history. The injured totaled over 600, and it did millions of dollars in damage. That was the last weekend grandmother ever got out of bed; she died a few months later of leukemia. We visited the City of the Holy carbon being in 1959. We learned how it worked, the intricacies of the must and the chills when they received this boiling mercury. The boiling mercury was protected from the outer environment through paper Air Forces. We released the film clip for acute myelogenous leukemia. We rated it 6-MP and a periodic basis for the unusual. Their physicians did not cover themselves with all of our human contacts and our experiments with built-in color-couplers performed so well that in 1940, the US Army Air Corp demanded and received this boiling mercury. The colleague, Dr. Adolfo Morel, had been given the footage. Still, we would not know about all human contacts and abductees. It was a very difficult time for diagnosing extraterrestrial strains of leukemia. As a matter of examination and monitoring, I didn't know the strains were actually supplied by Dr. Morel.

I am visited by the famous writer Jack Kerouac. I read some of "On the Road," probably too late in life because it did not move me to become a cross-country hoodlum. But I liked "Book of Dreams," which my sources tell me may have been generated as a part of Project Clockscan. In this dream, Jack wants to smoking marijuana with me. I am to roll the next joint. This makes me nervous; I may be found out. So my wife closes the curtain. She understands about writers. I take out a rolling paper, which is really more like a square of plastic wrap. It is hidden inside a false can of shaving cream. I am trying to roll the cigarette, but I don't know what I'm doing. I don't have the knack. I am not a Beat, but rather I am working on a school paper for one of my sons. But I've left the assignment in one of the old Sunday school classrooms at First United Methodist Church in Duncanville. To return to the classroom, I must walk along the side of the sanctuary.

A service is in progress. I can hear the organ playing. I enter the Sunday school building through a door that is linked to the sanctuary by a short covered walkway. I climb a set of old, metal stairs, very rickety. On a landing near the top, I find an automatic glockenspiel. The stairs are shaking, which sets the glockenspiel into a brief phrase from a hymn. I hope that I have not disturbed the service in the adjoining sanctuary. I realize I have not, but I see that trouble is looming. These are clearly the wrong stairs. And they are about to collapse. If these stairs come crashing down, then I will certainly disturb the service – not to mention destroy this old antique piece of architecture and the glockenspiel.

Then I am with the parents of my son's soccer team. I write the team newsletter. There have been complaints. Some parents say they have been insulted by my commentary.

A sunny day at the ocean, spent with a girl I know. A friend? a relative? -- I am not sure. She looks a bit like one of my cousins (circa 1975).

She is going to dive to the bottom of the sea, under 40 feet – maybe 44 feet – of water. She will hold her breath, letting out air as she ascends.

"How will I know when you should return?" I ask.

"Count your breaths," she tells me. The count is either 25 or 45; I'm not sure.

"This will be the same amount of time I can hold my breath underwater," she says.

So she descends, and I start counting breaths. Then some friends arrive, and I am distracted. I lose count.

I pick up a ring that is lying on a paved, pool-like area of the shore. The ring turns gold, then blue. It reminds me of plastic or a lightweight stone.

I resume counting breaths. I watch her bubbles break the surface, one small bubble at a time. I am afraid she will not make it. She's been under too long. I go to the water's edge, peer into the water. Then I see her form, rising from the depths. A moment later, she breaks the surface.

She comes ashore with an armful of white dress shirts, two or perhaps four dozen.

"I am amazed by your achievement," I tell her. "I could not have done it. Maybe I could descend 10 feet, tops."

And I offer an idea: If she ever does it again, we should use a rope with a weight on it.

"The weight would pull you to the bottom so you wouldn't have to swim," I explain. I would use the rope to bring the weight back to the surface.

We are walking back home, to a college dorm I think. She is excited about the shirts

"Everybody's going to want one of these!" she says.

Except now she is a man.

I don't tell him that no one will want a white shirt that's been lying at the bottom of the sea. This is a very personal treasure.

Our walk brings us to the southeast corner of Main and Center streets in Duncanville. Will Chrison is there, and he pushes or shoves my friend. I insert myself into the conflict, shoving Will back a step. We fight, and Will becomes increasingly enraged. Then I see he has a cohort, and my diving buddy and I decide to run away.

Will and his companion pursue us north along Main Street toward the Ben Franklin. When we reach the store, I see our chance. I grab Will and my friend grabs the other. We drag them into the store, where we ask the employees to call the police.

An employee places the call, but no one answers. At this point, I realize I and my friend each have a spiral notepad filled with writing. I see the notepads lying on the checkout counter. So we pick up the pads and start to leave with our prisoners. I am somewhat apprehensive. What will we do with these dangerous people? We can't let them go, but we have no place to take them.

Then I speak to a customer, who tells me there are some policeman-types working at a nearby car sales lot.

"Would that help?" he asks.

Yes, I say, and I have him write down the information in my friend's notepad.

Imagine a movie: I am with others, in an isolated area with a junk car. Another car approaches. There is a threat. We must defend ourselves. I frantically search the junk car for hand grenades...

This is a weekend road trip. I arrive in a hotel lobby, carrying luggage. I meet a woman with her young child. We talk briefly, then enter a small auditorium. I am joined by my wife and our boys. We all watch TV together, having a good time.

I am in the backyard of a house. This is where I am staying, not the hotel. I go out to a sort of carport/storage building. I am trying to organize yard tools and other items. There is a fold-up fishing pole. Across the street, I see people at a house.

Then it is Sunday about noon. I realize we must get organized, pack up and fix lunch and get on the road. We are far from home, six or eight hours away. We must get home in time for school on Monday morning, but I doubt that we can pull it off. The group I am with does not see organized or motivated. And there is still so much to do.

There is a large puddle in the yard that we must drain. It is not deep, so I decide we can simply drain it by digging a ditch. I have a shovel but I am looking for a narrow hoe, which would be the perfect tool to create this ditch.

Lunch is prepared, a meal of spaghetti and tomato sauce. We don't have enough plates or flatware, so we must eat one at a time. I am eating first. I have a white shirt or cloth that I use as a sort of lap table. When I've finished eating, I realize I have soiled this cloth. It can't be used by anyone else. I decide to wash it in a large sink.

At a school, part Duncanville High and part Hastings Elementary. I go to the school library, where I am told I have two minutes to select a book. This will be tough, for I know most of the books are for children. But immediately I see one I am interested in: "On Establishing The Dark Night Of The Soul." I do not know if this is the original "Dark Night of the Soul" or a book about it. I do not select the book, but continue looking around the library.

Then I am back in my old bedroom at Woodacre Circle. It is a Friday, 8 a.m. I took off from work to go on a job interview, but I realize as I am making the bed that I never set up the interview. I received a letter from the man who wanted to interview me, but I was supposed to call him to arrange a day and time. Perhaps I can get in to see him today, but I fear it is not likely. I have wasted a vacation day.

I am in Grand Prairie, driving to Duncanville. The logistics are complicated because my wife and I are in separate flesh-coated machine men. We live in Grand Prairie in a hilltop home with a westerly view. I think that my work will be a close drive.

We are camping on a nearby hill, possibly at Joe Pool Lake State Park. My wife and my parents are here. I arrive late, and the tent and our camp is already set up. In fact, it is time to break camp and leave. I go to the restroom, which is old and a bit primitive. The toilet is the normal flush type, but there is no sink. I look around, then go outside. My parents are outside waiting.

“Aren’t you going to wash your hands?” my mother asks.

I keep looking for the sink, eventually opting to wash my hands in the water fountain.

Back at our campsite, there are people all around. The sites are very close together. A bobcat or mountain lion approaches. Fred our miniature schnauzer sees it, and the two animals look at each other. I know the bobcat will eat Fred, so I tell my dad (who is standing next to the dog) to pick him up. He does so, and I chase the wild animal away.

We start breaking camp. There is a quick downpour, which wets the tent.

“Now we’ll have to take it down wet and dry it at home,” I say.

Also, I have some notes and papers I am working on. Some of the items are related to Grand Prairie, because there are copies of an old school newspaper from that city. Somehow my parents are reading or helping me with these papers. The conversation shifts to my book, which they have been reading.

“It is very good,” they tell me.

I realize that I should tell them it is all based on dreams; they will be even more impressed. But now we must finish breaking camp.

The tent is already down, but the stakes are still in the ground. I can’t see them all because it is getting dark. I tell my parents and my wife that I need them to remember where the tent stakes were planted. I see some tools on the ground that I know aren’t ours. They belong to the man in the neighboring site. His tent is only a couple of feet away, so I just hand him the items.

I am working in a news room, interviewing a woman. But she takes control of the interview. She gives me material for several stories without me needing to ask a single question. Another reporter who is present comments to the group that this woman is in “the strike zone. You’ve just pitched five strikes!”

Then I am standing in a checkout line, possibly at McDonald’s. I give the person behind the counter a gift certificate. I think it’s for $27 and some change. He asks if I have “anything better,” meaning of course smaller. I say no, but then realize I do have two more gift certificates in smaller denominations. But that’s OK; I want to break this big one.

The man returns with a handful of quarters and other silver change. I know this can’t be enough change, so I ask him.

“I have to collect the rest of the money from other workers,” he says. “I’ll give it to you later.”

I don’t like this and comment on it to my wife, who has just arrived.

An obvious play on “Man With the Golden Gun.” The midget has his boss’s next victim on a boat, which is sinking. The victim is panicky, but not the midget. He knows the boat isn’t really going to sink; it’s a trick.

I am in a desert mountain range, but it is near Joe Pool Lake immediately west of Duncanville. The terrain looks like something out of a Georgia O’Keefe painting. Indeed, some of the natural features have been exaggerated by the addition of paint. So when you look at part of a nearby mountain it looks like an O’Keefe. Also, I am standing next to a painting of an animal -- a bird or lizard -- Native American Indian in style. I have dreamed of these mountains before. They are a geographical anomaly of the Land of the Dead, breathtakingly beautiful, yet almost no one in the Dallas area knows about it. This is odd, because there is a paved trail with a river and an interpretive center. It is somehow part of or connected with the Wycliffe Bible Translators’ center on Camp Wisdom Road on western limits of Duncanville.

The interpretive center is midway on the trail, perhaps set into the mountains. I am there with my oldest son, and he has been working on a project in some children’s class. I help him carry some of the things he received and/or made in class, including a cup and a T-shirt. Somewhere in all of this I am with Jack Bryson; we talk about going to get a beer.

Now the sun is on the horizon, and I am looking at the mountains with my wife. We see a mysterious phenomenon which I am told happens here every day. The last rays of the setting sun sweep across the mountains like a search light, then fade into night. Again, I think how much this landscape looks like a painting, not reality. I look at another part of the mountains, high on a peak, and see a city or castle. Light flashes across it, too. Perhaps it is lightening. Very beautiful.

I comment to my wife that I never realized that all of the beautiful paintings I’ve ever seen were really just exact photorealistic representations of reality.

“The artists simply go to a place where reality is otherworldly beautiful,” I say.

I am on foot, descending a wide, muddy road down a hill. I’m going to the creek trail.

First, I walk through a building, which looks like a hotel lobby. Then I’m outside again, where I am joined by Rosy our black Lab. This is a winding foot trail, paved in some places. It occurs to me that it winds too much, a mistake made by the private developer who created it. It would never work for flesh-coated machine men. This is why it is good that we put the government in charge of building highways. We can hold them responsible.

I reach the end of the trail, which stops at a street. I can follow the street back to the hotel, but I don’t know how far out of the way it will be. So I decide to just follow the trail back. This is where things start to go wrong.

I am on the high ground, looking down into the creek. Snakes are everywhere. Rosy is down there, safe but unable to get up to me. And I’m sure not going down there. So I decide to follow the creek on the high ground and, hopefully, Rosy and I will meet up when we reach the hotel.

We don't, though, and I don't have time to go back and look for her. I am supposed to go somewhere for the night, a camping trip perhaps. I run into Hal O'Danvic, father of one of my son's close friends, and tell him about my troublesome dog.

"She'll just have to spend the night on her own," I say. "That'll teach her."

We laugh a bit. Then circumstances begin to grow fuzzy. I think my wife is there. We talk about my work and one of my publications, the "Bulletin." I had to deliver it late, at 2:15 a.m. I think Hal reads it, but this is impossible. He doesn't even work at my company.

In a dorm room or apartment at Stephen F. Austin University in Nacogdoches. I am visiting a college friend, Cathy Solana. I am staying in the adjoining room, but for some reason some of my clothes are in her room. We talk a bit, I'm not sure about what.

Later a friend from SMU shows up. He is Bill Lord. Somehow he knows Cathy, although I'm sure they never met. He points out something I had not noticed: Cathy is pregnant.

I leave to take an overnight trip with others. We arrive in a place that looks like downtown Fort Worth on Taylor Street, about a block from the Star-Telegram. I am part of a big group, marching to our destination. I am in the lead, apparently a famous person. I am talking with a journalist who is following me. The assembly includes a dog, a black Lab like Rosy. She carries a little toy in her mouth, and I make some joke about it. Then we arrive at our destination.

It is a large building, like a convention center space. We are there for a cooking class. A chef stands behind the counter in a sort of display kitchen, like the one in the crafts building at the Texas State Fair. I am there with my wife.

Each couple is to prepare the same item, which looks like some kind of giant salad with lots of ingredients.

Next I am walking through the building, looking for a restroom. I find the women's room, then a little later the men's room. But it is an exit only door; no handle or way to open it from my side. Where is the entrance?

Just then, someone comes out. I move to go through the door before it closes, but I am taken aback. The man who is coming out is Dick Clark. I am surprised, speechless. I simply turn around and continue my search. But as I walk I start thinking of all the famous people I have run into in public restrooms. I think of Ross Perot Jr. (actually, in waking life I have met with him several times but never in connection with a restroom) and Rod Steiger, the actor who played Jud Fry in the movie "Oklahoma!" (He was waiting in the restroom line behind me at a special showing of "Oklahoma!" years ago at the Inwood Theater in Dallas.) I think about what a good book this would make. And I have a funny name for it, too: "Glory Hole." I tell myself that perhaps I will write this book after I finish my dream book.

Next, I go to a room with some of the people from my trip. One of them is busy working on some mathematical calculations. It is a chart with questions on two axis and a grid filled with numbers. Each number corresponds to a question on each axis. The answers to the questions are whole numbers which, when multiplied together, will equal the number in the grid. He has just about finished the work, but has hit a snag. He must find two whole numbers that equal "43." He has written down 8 and 3, but he knows this is not right.

"Just divide three into 43 and see what you get," I suggest.

But then we realize that the solution cannot be a whole number.

"I wonder if there is any way we can find two whole numbers that will equal 43," I say.

Another man who is standing nearby says "You can't."

"Well, there you have it," I reply.

Upon awakening, though, I realize there are two whole numbers that will satisfy the needs of the equation. Of course, the answer is "1" and "43."

I am on an outing with members of Human/Alien Hybrid Information Bureau, visiting the home of a co-worker. He and his wife have painted the outside in colors of their alma mater, Texas A&M. It is purple and gray.

Once inside, I check out the kitchen. It has two refrigerators. One of them is about 10 feet tall. That's not a problem because the ceiling is perhaps 14 feet. This is an old house.

I look out a window into the backyard. Not much there, fairly small. The family enjoys this home now, but they only have one pre-school child. It occurs to me that I could not live here with my family. The neighborhood does not have our type of people. They are mostly poor and Hispanic. We would be hated here. Our boys would have no one they could play with. They would have to go to private school, which means we'd have to drive them across town for play dates.

My father has died. I am not sure of the details, for circumstances change during the dream. Events do not necessarily occur in chronological order. Disjointed recollections...

The terminal illness is a cancer, I think. And the diagnosis and death occur quickly, all within a few days. In fact, I think it was diagnosed on a Friday and he died on a Sunday, but that may be Christ imagery added as I was waking. I am not sure.

I must help my mother sort out her affairs. But somehow, dad is alive again. Together, they are showing me foundation work that must be done to the old house on Cherry. Somehow they still own this place, even though I know they sold it in 1972.

At some point, I am at a flight school. I talk to Jack Bryson on the phone, conversing very pleasantly. Then I remember my dad is dead. I tell him about the funeral. But he tells me he is tied up this week and won't be able to attend the service. I talk to a few others. And each time, it is as if life just goes on. Even me. None of us seem to be caught up by the news of my father's death. Life goes on.

Then the woman from the dream with the living painting appears at the flight school or perhaps another location. She needs someone to speak on her behalf at a child custody hearing. She has a baby she has been nursing to health, but there is a risk it will be taken away from her.

Also at some point, I am in a bedroom, attempting to dress. I can't find my clothes, or perhaps there is something wrong. I must get myself dressed, take care of the funeral and financial issues for my mother.

I am examining a collection of ship models, which are displayed outside in tanks or trays of water. Upon closer inspection, I see that the models depict ships and submarines with various examples of hull damage. The models belong to a salvage company, which is showing techniques it uses to recover documents that have been water damaged when the shipping container seal is broken.

Then I go to Billy Bob's Texas, where I am to meet co-workers for a Christmas party. I meet a deputy sheriff visiting from Corpus Christi. He is alone here and he asks me where I am going first. I sense he wants to hang out with me, but I tell him I am going to a private party. We go our separate ways.

Later, I am visiting a family (perhaps my relatives) at their home in the city. They are talking to their mother on the phone. They want me to take them for a ride on the train. This is explained to me by a man, perhaps my father.

"This will be nice for them," he says. "All you have to do is drive them to a nearby train station. They'll just ride it to the stop by their house."

I work for the CIA. I am waiting in line at the main gate of the agency headquarters in Langley, Va. On a random basis, certain people in line will be selected to undergo an intensive security check. This is a 10-day process involves taking laxatives to flush out a radioactive ring. If you are selected, you are also expected to recover the ring. You must go through the strainer that fits in the toilet. A woman is ahead of me in line. She is a friend. Something is wrong because a page from her passport is being projected onto a screen. I see the image, which reveals an almost invisible entry in Russian. I can't believe it. She is a double agent. She comes ashore from a hymn. I hope that I have not lost the mountains, high on a peak, and see part Duncanville High and part like some kind of giant salad, the kingdom of worldly associations on us. Even me. None of us seem aware of the building. I am trying to organize, to be done with it all.

I am taking a nighttime walk through a village-like urban landscape, something you might encounter in Europe or on the East Coast. I am pursued or perhaps am being pursued.

I spend the night at the Bryson family ranch, leaving my pickup in the parking lot of a sort of rural shopping village. The next day, I walk around the ranch a bit, then gather my things to leave. I look at the distant hills. One is on fire, the result of a fireworks show. This is part of a plan by bad guys to launch an attack on America. An attack with fireworks, so it is not quite effective.

As I walk back to the shopping center, I search the parking lot but cannot find my pickup. I walk past several buildings, which are designed and laid out like a combination Disneyland village and an old western town. I must go through one of the buildings to get to the parking lot. Inside, I walk past a giant merry go round and start up an inclined concourse. The grade is not steep, yet I find my legs will not carry me. I must drag myself along the handrail. Others are experiencing similar difficulties. Could this be an increase in the gravitational pull? No one offers a satisfying explanation for this mysterious trouble that has befallen us.

I am in Duncanville near the house of the town druggist, just off Peach Street a few blocks from Cherry Street. I am with a young woman. She is a bit overweight though not unpleasantly so. We take off our clothes, but then she is gone and I am alone.

Later, I am with my wife and in a very matter of fact way she confronts me with my sin.

“I saw you undressing with the girl, through the window,” she says.

I hesitate, unwilling to admit my attempted adultery. Perhaps she is only guessing. If I deny it, I may yet get off.

Next I find myself at the Gulf Coast, walking on a submerged sandbar across part of the gulf waters to an island. But when I get there and wish to return, I look back toward the mainland and it seems too far. I see the distant skyline of Corpus Christi. I am not sure I can find my way back. What if I start out across the water and lose the sandbar? It is too far to swim.

So I wade a bit. I come upon a sign that warns of an underwater footing of some sort. I could walk on that, yet I suspect it could not possibly extend all the way to the mainland. Then I find myself at a sort of boardwalk, where a woman recommends a restaurant for my visit.

Inside a house that looks like the home of Shad Leyherd, a boy who lived across the street from my home on Cherry Street. He died about 20 years ago.

I need a haircut, but instead of going to the barber I decide to try it myself. I start by trimming the right side. Soon, I realize I have cut it in the feathered, over-the-ear style I wore in high school. I don't want to look like that. How can I fix it? I want it above the ears. How did it grow so long, anyway?

I am afraid to attempt to trim it to the proper length. I am not a barber; it will look homemade. Instead, I decide to give myself a burr cut.

I need my old electric razor, which is in the bathroom. My mother is in there now, so I can't go in. And I don't want her to know what I am doing. Although I have been wearing my hair quite short, a burr will be even shorter. So I go back to the bedroom, where I have been cutting and I find the contents of a drawer strewn about the floor. This is all my dad's stuff, apparently left here after a recent trip (he is still in the military, not yet retired). I sort through the items, finding several old razors. The newest of the group doesn't have a power cord, so I finally select an older one.

I look in the garage. Something is amiss. My pickup is parked in my wife's usual spot. The bed is filled with water. It contains a dolphin, which is jumping wildly out of the water. It is obviously unhappy in this confined environment.

I close the door and go to the kitchen, where I ask my wife about this strange development.

"I rescued it," she explains. "And I'm going to keep it."

I argue against it.

"We are not prepared to care for this animal," I say. "It will die. It's illegal to own it. We can't take care of it."

And it is time for me to drive to work. Where shall I put the dolphin? What is her plan?

"Take the dolphin out of the truck," she says. "Just put it in something else and then go on to work."

I go back to the garage to look at the dolphin, but this time I just watch it through the peep hole. It is still jumping wildly, coming close to or even bumping against the wall. There is no way to manage such a large, panicked creature. I can't get it out of the truck. And even if I could we have nothing else to put it in.

"We can't keep it," I tell her.

"I'm tired of you saying that," she replies. "You're being so negative."

"But it's a dolphin!"

Sitting at the breakfast table is our grown son, who is mentally retarded. He does not understand my yelling. He's scared of me. I put my hand on his shoulders, try to comfort him. But I am not successful. He buries his face in his hands.

In the backyard at night in the rain. I am helping a visitor get their car out to the road so they can go home. Then we have a new, unexpected arrival.

I go to their car. I find my cousins Jay and Daphne, who have just arrived here after a long car ride from out of state. They are young again, about 20 years old. Jay tells me they must talk to us about a family issue of great importance. They have already contacted my parents and others, and a family meeting has been scheduled for 2:30 a.m. So until then, it's a mystery. But only to my wife and me. For within minutes, we gather with several of the invited guests. Jay and Daphne are out of earshot, so the group can speak freely. It is clear from the discussion that everyone here already know much more than we do. There is a history, seeped in gossip and opinion. We do not know enough even to make sense of this conversation. I assume it has to do with their parents and the old homestead in Fort Jesup.

Driving in Dallas, past a fire station and approaching a signal light. I see that the fire trucks are about to take off on an alarm call, so I pull over, one wheel up on the curb. I see a police car and wonder if he will ticket me for being on the curb, but apparently he also realizes that the fire trucks are about to pass. He is going with them and is not troubled by me. The trucks drive past and I continue on my way, onto a freeway that skirts downtown.

My wife is in the car with me. The car is hers, a Lamborghini we recently bought used. She reminds me that the dealer said there were problems with the car. We must bring it in for service soon. The car has a computer that compensates for these problems, but the compensation can cause problems, too. Indeed, my wife tells me that she has noticed a change in the sound of the engine and it tends to stick in second gear.

We pull into the service area of the dealership. I get out of the car, but my wife is already standing outside the car. And she has to, because the car has suddenly become a one seater, a go-cart. I tell the service tech we need to leave the car. I look at it again and see that it is now one of the battery-powered plastic Jeep flesh-coated machine men that my sons used to drive in the backyard.

A group of teenagers is assigned to take the car to the garage, and I follow them. But the car is soon forgotten, and we all go into an apartment. We sit down, and it becomes clear that they all know me. They joke about my reputation for idiosyncratic behavior and ideas. They are all very pleasant, obviously friendly towards me.

As they talk, I realize that my mouth feels full of dry, granulated mucus. My breath must smell awful. So I go into the kitchen, get a glass out of a cabinet and fill it with warm water. I wash out my mouth, spitting the water into the sink. I look down and see that my mouth contained little hairs, worms and a couple of black ants or ant-sized beetles. It is the mouth of a dead man.

I am the front seat passenger in my old 1970 Cutlass convertible, going to high school. We are stopped at a combination police/school barricade, the first car in line. The principal speaks through a bullhorn, explains to everyone that the police will be searching flesh-coated machine men for drugs and alcohol.

“So if you have anything, now is the time to declare it,” he says.

I have a bottle of tequila and a bottle of margarita mix. But I don’t want to pour them out, so I stuff the bottles under the front seat. I get out of the car, along with the driver and the back seat passenger. We stand at the front of the car, and the police begin their search. I look away, hoping my face does not give away my secret. And, of course, hoping that somehow they overlook my contraband.

A dream under fever: Curled up in bed, I imagine my torso gone and head and arms reconnected with pelvis and legs, turning me into a giant snake.

I am at a Webelos camp out. Cubmaster Dolph Rawls is there; it’s his son’s last camp out before going into Boy Scouts. I walk around. Everything is in perfect order. I have been camping here, too; now I must leave. It is Sunday, 7 a.m. But I can’t pack up because I can’t bring my car to the site until after the final ceremony at 10:30 a.m. It’s too far to carry my equipment. So I ask Dolph and the others to pack up for me. I must go.

I am riding in my old Cutlass convertible, top down, in Duncanville. There is a sort of town square between the First Christian Church and First United Methodist, at about the location of the bank’s rear parking lot. Here I make an important discovery: My car can fly!

I can become airborne by using the floor shifter. A few people take note of my flying, but it is not considered to be particularly noteworthy. I land the car and drive along the side of the Christian church, where there is some sort of competition going on. This is the same side lawn where I used to play at Boy Scout meetings. Today, I see that there is a talent contest or cheerleading competition. I see that an old classmate – Mindy Dutton – is performing. I turn right and park on the Avenue C side of the church property.

Then I go inside what is now supposed to be my apartment building. I find my unit. The door is open, and people are busy setting up for a photo shoot. The living room is large, almost like a warehouse (lots of open space), with wood floors and big windows which reveal a busy cityscape. I go inside and see that all of my camping gear has been laid out neatly on the floor. The tent is folded into a rectangle, with poles and lines arranged on top. I see Dolph and thank him.

Then I go down the hall to the bedroom. This is when I realize that I am one of several people who share this apartment. Dolph lives here, too. He is cleaning up from the camp out. I realize that I need to get cleaned up, too, but there is only one bathroom. I must wait. Then I remember that on Thursday I was supposed to ask Mindy out on a date. One of her friends told me that tonight she is to receive a special award, perhaps related to the talent show/cheerleading event I saw outside the church. She needs a date, which seems odd because in high school she was quite beautiful and popular. I was supposed to ask her, but I forgot. Should I ask her now? But surely this is too late, the last minute. What will I do? I try to imagine myself asking her out, but I can't keep from thinking that I am not good enough. How could I ask someone like her, so beautiful and popular? I decide to do nothing. If I am confronted, perhaps I will make up a story about having been too sick. This is terrible.

I go into the bedroom. Dolph has finished his shower. I think he is wearing a towel or maybe already dressed. He is there and so are two other men. One is Davy Allis, and I think he is one of my roommates, too. So I begin making preparations for my shower. Somehow I have already taken off my clothes. I am naked, which is embarrassing. So I turn my back to the room and put on a pair of boxers. Then I go to the cabinet to get a towel. But Dolph has stacked some papers (in shipping tubes) on top of the rolled up towels. As I try to pull out a towel, the papers start to fall. It is a difficult procedure, but eventually I succeed. Then I step to the back of the room, where Davy and another man are discussing Microsoft's X-Box. (The other man is sitting at a computer, his back to me.) Davy comments that X-Box is useless. He makes some sarcastic remark, something like "X-Box is great if you want to play Portugus." His point is that Portugus is the only decent game offered.

The man at the computer seems to agree with the sentiment, but he adds that X-Box "will also run Reactive," which I gather is a sort of computer programming language. I don't know what you do with it.

I am in front of a mirror, wearing an ascot. But I button the top button, so the ascot is hidden.

In a parking lot, with wife and kids. Wife asks if I want a divorce. I say "no, I want our family to stay together."

I am driving by myself, on the way to see Jack Bryson. I am to meet him at a corner (the one where the barber shop in Coppell should be), where he is parked. As I approach, I see him in the pickup he owned in 1987 but there is another car and he is talking to several girls. I drive past and realize the road I am on isn't in Coppell, but it is the highway entering Kaufman, Texas, the gateway to the Land of the Dead.

I turn around in a business parking lot and return to the corner where I saw Jack. I am driving slowly; a car crowds up behind him, impatient to pass. I pull off the road and park. A Beach Boys song is playing on my radio; the girls are gone. I walk toward Jack's truck, now hearing a different Beach Boys song. It doesn't sound right, though, as if it is a tape recording and the playback motor has too much warble. Jack sees me now, jumps out of his truck. He looks nervous, guilty. I look to my right and see a white station wagon (1960s Ford, just like one that Devin Marrow from high school and college drove) buried nose first in a swamp. I see no one around the vehicle. Did it crash this way? Was it pushed in? Is someone trying to get rid of evidence of a murder? Did Jack kill the girls?

I am in a pickup, painted red as if for use by a fire department. It reminds me of a larger one I drove once on a trip. But this one is just a normal truck, a Ford F-150. I am thinking that I really prefer the appearance of the Chevy pickup. Also, part of the time I am in a house – or, more specifically, the garage that has been partially outfitted as a room but still has space for flesh-coated machine men. This place is far from home. I am there with a woman (my wife? I can't recall), and I am supposed to be studying for a test. I think I have a book, or maybe I left it at home.

I am at a party in a house. Standing outside the front door, I pick up an empty, discarded soft drink can. I go inside and dispose of it in the trash compactor. This is a large, nice home. It is set up for outdoor entertaining. There is a narrow pool in roughly the shape of Israel. It is mostly surrounded by lawn; there is only a small deck area at one of the narrow ends.

A little girl comes in. She doesn't speak, but I understand I should follow her. I leave the house, walking a sidewalk along a busy street. Suddenly, she grabs me and pulls me to the ground. I look beside me. There is a woman, unconscious. I check her quickly for injuries, then run a few yards to a nearby gas station.

"Call an ambulance!" I shout.

The man who works at the station is unconcerned.

"Yeah, I think we have a phone," he says.

I am disgusted by his attitude. I turn away and start back for the woman. Over my shoulder I shout something to the man about his "callous nature."

Back at the woman's side, I find the girl and a man. He is ready to reach in her mouth, to clear the airway. But I stop him.

"Wait, let's make sure that's really the problem," I say.

I lean over the woman and put my ear to her mouth, listening for breathing. Suddenly, she opens her eyes. She's all right.

"This little girl saved your life," I tell her.

At a restaurant, enjoying lunch with co-workers. Time to sort out the bill. I am surprised by the total, which is over $200 (I believe it was $216 – or maybe $211 -- plus change). We are not a large group, perhaps four total. I look over the charges, but I can't get it to work out. Then one of the men in our group gets sick, vomits in the middle of the restaurant. He heads for the restroom, bill in hand. I go after him.

But I quickly realize he has left the restaurant. I find him next door, preparing to be seated at another restaurant.

"I need the bill," I say.

No, he doesn't have it anymore. He's still feeling sick; don't bother him.

"Just ask them for another one," he says.

But I explain that I can't have them run off another bill. It would throw off their daily register tape. We need this bill.

Oh, so they don't know what you owe them?

"Blow it off," he concludes. "They can't stop you."

"Blow it off?" I ask.

Now a crowd is beginning to form, people smiling at me.

"Do I look like a blow it off-er? You'll have to get someone else to provide you with that particular service."

That gets a laugh from onlookers. I am pleased with my little joke.

A map of New York state, studying the river (Hudson?) forming the northern and northeastern borders, twisting with switchbacks and widening into occasional lakes. Rivers in Texas don't wind like this. They flow straight, southeasterly toward the Gulf. But if some Texan were to ask, I'd explain that the river twists because of the mountains. It's the only way to gain the lower regions.

Building a house in the lake. Big steel pipes driven into the lake bottom, just like building a dock. But it will be enclosed for a residence. People come from all around to see it, for they know it will not succeed. The elements will take it. It is a foregone failure.

And now on the road from Mabank to Canton, 70 MPH through little rural crossroads. Here's a church, "Full Gospel." And a sign out front, with prices.

Worship service, $2.

Baptism, $5.

Saved soul/born again, $7.50.

It's a deal. No "partial gospel" here. You get your money's worth.

Inside the house I hear someone in the garage. I open the inside door and see a beautiful woman in a suit with short skirt, stealing the battery from our car. She immediately runs away.

A few minutes later, I open the door again, and she's back. I lower the garage door, trapping her. We must call police. But my wife doesn't want to. She wants to keep the woman trapped in the garage forever. She only agrees to call the police after she sees the woman, sees that she is no threat.

"She has no boobs," my wife says.

Now the door from the house to the garage has a full-length window, and I can talk to the woman through the glass. I shout for her not to worry. She won't be trapped forever. We're going to let her go.

"It's all arranged," I say, giving her a thumbs up.

"Thanks," she says.

My wife goes into another part of the house, away from the garage. She has called the police. I go to check on her, leaving the woman alone in the garage. Now the woman realizes that she's not being released. She begins to yell, a terrible howl. I am fearful. She is capable of delivering much terror. And she is resourceful; after all, she had the ability to remove the battery from the car. I am afraid her yelling will scare the boys, who are already in bed asleep for the night.

I am in our kitchen, looking at the boys at the breakfast table. The room has a faint skunk scent. And, indeed, the boys have a baby skunk at the table.

"Put it outside," I tell them.

One of them picks it up, and I see that it doesn't look like a skunk at all. It is hairless and reddish brown. It appears to have nipples hanging down from its underside. And I think I see eggs or little embryos falling from its belly.

In a rural subdivision, talking to a couple of the homeowners. They are discussing the dispensation of piles of junk (old construction materials, etc.) I tell them that the owner occasionally loads up junk into his truck and hauls it away. Then the homeowners tell me about two nearby houses. They want to sue the owner/home builder because of water damage. The water is coming in through their garages.

"Those are the smallest garages," the woman tells me.

She has lived there longer than these newer residents. Then attention turns to a stretch of ground between her storage building and another house. She tells me this is where a lot of rats run back and forth, by far the most in the subdivision.

I start walking along the road. I must go to a house where I am to pretend I am the son. I need the father to sign a release form so I can go on some sort of a school trip. I start walking. I think I am accompanied by a young boy. I begin running and get it in my head that perhaps if I go fast enough then I can fly. I shut my eyes and jump. Sure enough, I am flying like Superman. I can't believe it. I now know how to fly!

I am not restricted to a life of mere ground travel anymore. I arrive at the front door of the house. I knock at the door, but then decide to go in. After all, I am pretending that I am a member of the family that lives here. I am not sure how I expect to fool this family, but it seems to work. I walk inside, to the kitchen, where a young woman (late teens, early 20s) is using a cordless drill on the wall. She is installing a telephone. There are some younger kids, maybe two. No one challenges me. I am accepted. The father is not around, so I decide I will have the woman sign my form. But I can't find the paper. I must leave, go find it and come back.

Outside, I get in a car with my boss. He says I should look again. Maybe I really do have the form. So I look in my wallet, go through all the little slips of paper. And sure enough, there is the form. But we are driving away from the house. I could go back and get the signature. But I tell my boss that it won't be necessary. I know I have the permission, so I can simply forge the signature. It will be all right.

Up on an ice flow on a glacier. Mountain climbing? I am not sure. Then I look at a brochure, showing this place and others. I notice that one of them – far away, perhaps Russia or Iceland – shows a giant greenhouse, where they grow vegetables in the cold and ark. It's named "something" Palace (can't remember the first word).

In Duncanville at the decommissioned Nike missile base, a Cold War fixture of my childhood. Workers are demolishing the old dining hall. I am watching from next door, in the last remaining barracks. This building was demolished years ago in the waking world, but now I find that it is still used by the city, and it has been partially rehabbed.

Upstairs, I walk past the old commons area and restroom, marveling at the difference and similarities from when I last saw this building almost 30 years ago. I walk to the end of the long hall, planning to leave via the fire escape – the same one I used when I came here for meetings as a Webelos scout. But I find these stairs are no longer accessible. Counters have been constructed in front of the door, blocking it.

I walk back to the front of the barracks and look out a window. I see more demolition work across the street. They appear to be razing a church or maybe a Tutor-style house, perhaps the CO's residence. Then I look again at the dining hall. From a side window, I can look down on the low, flat roof, divine its floor play. I remember when they used it for the Jay Cee's Haunted House, which included a live Boa Constrictor decorated in washable paint that glowed under a black light.

Strangely, I find that the dining hall is almost touching the barracks; I can touch it from my window. The roof is strewn with junk and debris, apparently undisturbed for years, decades even. I see several vases with lids – no, not vases. They look more like funeral urns.

I go outside, hoping to find a way to the roof so I can retrieve these vases. They're not mine, of course, but soon they will be destroyed in the demolition. I talk to an observer, tell him this is the last remaining building of the old base. I am sad that nothing will be left, but it's understandable. The city was basically handed the keys by the military, which just walked away.

I want to get to the dining hall, but I find that it is cordoned off by a sort of ditch with construction debris. Really, it reminds me of a World War I foxhole in a bombed out village. I see others are climbing over and through the mess. But after a bit of thought, I leap over it. Everyone is amazed, myself included. I realize I can fly! What a discovery!

Using my newfound gift, I transport someone up to the roof, maybe more.

Then I am part of a group of 6 or 8. We must leave this place. There is some danger. We walk in a sort of basement window well. We come to a ladder, and the one person in front of me starts climbing. I follow. But a woman in our group tells us not to go. I continue, though, and everyone else follows. Now we are on a roof, and we can't get down. For some reason, we can't go back the way we came. This is trouble, for soon it will be growing dark. A vampire or winged devil is in the area, and he will get us come sundown. I must save us from this terrible fate.

Our group includes a child, a little girl. So I fly here down first. Soon, we are all on the ground together.

Except for a black girl. I had not even noticed her before. I saw her leave alone, taking the stairs. This could be bad. If she was approached by the vampire while out of our sight, then she could have become one and we wouldn't even know it. When darkness falls, she will attack us.

I am inside a building, not a home. I am to go to a party (a wedding shower, I think) for Anne Dorris, a friend from high school. For her present, I have purchased a place setting of Fiesta ware dishes. But then I leave the building and walk past Anne and the partygoers, who are gathered on the sidewalk by the parking lot. Anne smiles my way, but I've decided I don't want to attend the party. I just wave and keep on walking, even carrying away the present intended for her. I'm just acting as if this is OK; I have other things to do.

Somehow, mixed in here, is the sense that this present is not acceptable. I just bought something, didn't check the bridal registry.

Then I am inside, walking to my apartment with my wife. But I see a couple of people I know, and they are cleaning up or organizing their apartment. So I help them. One of them is an older woman, and they joke that she is going to be out all night. It seems she is part of some seniors group, and they are going to do square dancing or some other activity.

Also, somehow I am in a car in the parking lot of Red Bird Mall. I go inside, carrying a palm-sized coil of day-glo yellow weedeater cord. I go into one of the department stores, hold the cord up against a sweater as if to match the color. But this is just to throw off the employees. I am planning to continue through the store and go to my real destination in the mall.

Then I am on foot, walking to some place east of Dallas. It is a long trip, maybe to Kaufman. It would be an hour by car. I am walking with others along an unpaved road. We are taking the back roads. This group also includes a couple of vehicles, but they drive at our speed. I am wearing a pair of pants from my waking life, a pair that is too long. I step on the cuff, prompting me to roll them up for easier walking. One of the walkers tells me I am welcome to ride in the back of the truck, but I decline. I don't know these people and don't want to get in a vehicle with strangers. Besides, it will be so exciting to arrive at my destination and tell everyone I walked the whole way. My parents will be there. They won't believe it. I am sure that my mother will say "but do you mean all the way from Duncanville?" And I will be able to say yes.

We come upon an old food store, a convenience store. I see the sign on the building, but don't recall the store name. But below the name are several brand names of the products, old or regional brands. One of them is "Klause." I think it was a brand of bread.

And finally, we arrive at a town. The unpaved road comes to a wide, divided boulevard that runs along the shore of a big lake. On the far shore I see a city, its buildings – including a church with steeple – crowded up against the water. It reminds me of a European city, and I think that it is amazing how different things look when walking rather than driving. I tell myself that is why it looks European, because I am walking.

I wonder if we are near my destination. It doesn't look right; I fear I am off course. I wonder if I might be able to persuade one of the drivers to take me the rest of the way. I ask one of the walkers where we are. He says "Seven Points, I think on Tawokani." But I know this isn't right. Seven Points is on Cedar Creek Lake, which means I am close to my parent's lake house. If he's right, I have traveled ever farther than I expected. What an achievement!

At the wheel of the car, my wife in the passenger seat. We are traveling north on the road in front of Grapevine Mills Mall. It is night (or dark, early morning) and there are patches of snow or ice on the ground. I attempt to turn left into the mall property, but I overshoot the road and end up in the icy mud. I am afraid we will be stuck, but I continue to apply power and we make it back onto the pavement.

I am on the phone with a journalist, arranging for him to travel by boat to meet one of my company's representatives for an interview. But it seems that I must be the journalist, too, for I find that I am on the boat. I am sitting in an enclosed cabin, like in a helicopter or private jet. I am at the very front, a one-seat row with a window on each side. And directly in front of me is a windowless door, which opens to the concourse at the arrival and departure ports – just like at an airport. I look out at all that ocean, no land in sight, and feel a bit panicky. I am in summer weight clothes. If the boat were to capsize or sink, I would die almost instantly in the icy Alaskan water. To overcome the panic, I close my eyes. When I open them, the scene has changed and I am behind the wheel of a car descending a grade toward a river.

The landscape makes me think a bit of Duncanville. No leaves on the trees, but it is obviously early spring because I see many red bud trees in bloom. I am overwhelmed by the dazzling beauty of what really is still a drab time of year. I realize I am in a dream, so I keep driving, hoping I can maintain this dream and continue to enjoy this incredible beauty. I come to a fork in the road. I fear that if I pick the wrong fork, I will wake from the dream. But I make my choice (left, I believe) and continue driving. All is well. Then I come to two more forks. And each time, I believe I take the left road. At the third fork, I come to a highway. There is a giant pothole on the shoulder, almost big enough to swallow a car. But I am in no danger of driving into it because at the place where the road meets the highway, there is a large graveled area. Plenty of room to avoid the hole.

Two flesh-coated machine men arrive as I do. I know the occupants. They are twins, attractive women about my age. Each is in her own car. I approach one of the women, who is in the passenger seat and has already opened the door. Her husband is driving. She walks over to my car. She is dressed nicely, in a silky blouse and pants. Large breasts, slim waist, very tan. Somehow I have it in my mind that I am to take her place. I am to become her and continue on her journey in the car. I am not entirely sure how this is to be accomplished. There's not enough makeup in the world to make me look like that!

But I proceed anyway, asking her something about tips on how to handle her husband. She gives an example about appealing to his sexuality, something about placing a sexy classified ad (something that addresses male genitals) in both the Dallas and Fort Worth dailies. She explains that when the paper comes out, you pretend to find the ad by accident and point it out to him. "Oh, look at this," she says. Then you later point out the ad in the other paper, letting him think that the two of you have discovered this strange coincidence together.

In a downtown or urban area, highlighted by restaurants and night life. I am with an intoxicated man, who I am responsible for transporting to safety. He is supposed to go to a shop in an underground corridor, a retail area that may also be associated with a subway. But it is dark, nighttime, and the underground area is now somewhat dangerous. And this man is a homosexual or associated with homosexuals. The shop where he is to go is also associated with homosexuals. If I go down into the underground, I may be attacked by these homosexuals. So I leave him at the portal to the underground, aim him in the right direction and hope for the best.

Then I am to make a deposit at a bank. The bank is closed, but the lobby is open. I go there, and people are present. I recognize Kandi Andright, a co-worker from 17 years ago at D Magazine. Does she recognize me? I don't look long enough to know. I act like I don't recognize her. I don't want an encounter, even though we were friends and she would certainly be glad to see me. I see that she and companions are filling out some tax forms. I see extras of these forms on the counter. I have some document or check to deposit, but the bank is still not open.

Alone in a house, wearing white stockings or pantyhose. I don't know why. Are there people outside? I am not sure. This cannot be good. Certainly I will be the butt of their joke.

In Duncanville, driving through one of the old neighborhoods. I think it's Peach Street a few blocks north of Cherry. And my wife is with me – no, maybe nearby. I am looking for a house she told me about, one that apparently has a nice yard but the structure itself has been razed. I am looking at a brick two-story where I can see that yard work has been done. Could this be the one she meant? Then she joins me, and she directs me deeper into the neighborhood. We turn a corner, and I see the place. The house is gone, only a concrete slab. But there is a covered back patio and some sort of arbor in the side yard. We drive by slowly, then turn around and head back. I see that we are passing a house I remember. When I was a boy, I believe we dropped off another boy here after swim lessons. Everything is older now. The road is asphalt, but worn so smooth and old that I see the underlying earth.

Then I am in my bedroom in the Woodacre Circle house. I am looking at my clothes on hangers, hung over a chair outside the closet. Perhaps I am packing for college, for that is my next stop.

The scene abruptly changes, and I am in a dorm room at a campus that is a mix of SMU and Stephen F. Austin in Nacogdoches. I go to the window, second floor, and look out on the campus. It is snowing, but only a few, dry flakes. I think that I am alone. I think about calling LeAnn Shedi, sharing my concern: I have no friends. I need to get involved, do something. I look downstairs in the yard and see several people at a picnic table, setting up for a party. They look up, and I realize I had better step away from the window because I am not wearing pants. I have on a shirt and my underwear. But it's not my usual boxers. Instead, it is jockeys – red with a heart or some other logo in white set off center on the front.

Then I am following a pickup and a tow truck, the latter is pulling an old ruined car I own, some sort of coupe from about 1940. (Perhaps it is the little coupe that raced with death; I am not sure.) We are crossing a divided highway on our way to take the old car to a junk yard. But as we are crossing the highway, the tow truck driver suddenly does an about face and takes off with the car. Furious, I follow the pickup and we pull into the junk yard. I talk to the junk yard man, who emerges from a tall, three-sided structure of steel girders and corrugated metal. I tell the junk yard man what has happened. I don't want to have the tow truck driver arrested or get his license revoked. I just want the car back. The junk yard man wants me to sign a form, a contract, something that gives him some right to recover the car for me.

Dallas-bound on the highway through Kaufman, traveling with Agatha Namani, an old friend from D magazine, as my passenger. I tell her I have kept up with her, know about her books on prayer. I ask her if she is happy with her life. Well, "no," she tells me, almost in tears. She has a new job in which she is not getting along with her boss, an ambitious, aggressive woman. She hands me a business card. I flip it over and see it is for American Airlines. Agatha is working in California. I ask her if it is possible for her to get a transfer to the Fort Worth headquarters, where she could escape the boss. She says maybe. (I forget that in the waking world, she worked for the American Airlines in-flight magazine in Fort Worth in the mid '80s.)

As we talk, we are out of the car and standing under a road overpass. Others are present, people from her work. We walk through a park which includes displays of military helicopters. A man is working a long metal tool. It is made of interlocking tubes which store on the helicopter. When assembled, the long tool is used as a sort of crank to deploy a part of the helicopter. I pick up a piece of it, then lay it on a flat area of the helicopter so it won't get lost.

We go into a house, which is full of people from Agatha's office. And a man from my wife's old work is there, too. He is roughhousing with me, like a kid. He gives me a "wedgie" or does something equally juvenile and unpleasant to my backside. I am happy to leave.

Then I am at Six Flags. I walk up to a gift shop – a booth, really, its front open to the walk. I look in a basket and see a mounted armadillo. But it is a strange creature, with some sort of odd anatomical feature on or next to the head. It looks like several thumb-shaped projections. The eyes of the armadillo are closed. Somehow I know that the man who mounted this animal was not happy with the job he did. I think of taking it (since he doesn't like it), but he must want it since he brought it to the booth and set it out for passers by to see.

I walk through a building, down a corridor. As I open the door to go back outside, a man in Native American Indian garb approaches from behind. And I see another one outside the door. They are both Indian dancers. I hold the door for the one behind me and say "hi," though I instantly wonder if I have committed a cultural faux pas. Outside, I overhear a father and his son talk about wanting to ride the boat. Somehow, the man thinks that all the water rides are really one ride. He even thinks the ride includes the water shows, one of which I can see from where I stand. Understandably, the man doesn't see how they can take the ride without being stopped along the way by all this activity. So he tells his boy that they should go.

"We're leaving," he says.

Somehow the backyard goes nuclear.

I don't know all the details, but there is a chain reaction involving commonplace materials that results in a volcanic eruption. We run for the house, reaching safety just ahead of the flaming lava and brimstone. Of course, radioactivity is still a major concern. How many curies can we safely absorb? Fire rains from the night sky. We must get away.

Now it is happening everywhere. Nuclear War. I run for the front door, and we all gather in the foyer to make our escape. I dress for the trip, putting on a necktie and overcoat over my pajamas. The radiation is heating up the house; it feels like the August sun. I see our neighbors in the street, driving away to the hills. But my group and I, we have no car. We must stay.

The nuclear summer doesn't last long. The half life must be very short, for the temperature falls and it begins to rain. I observe this from my perch on the low branch of a tree, an ideal location to be a bit closer to heaven. It occurs to me that we must think differently from now on, start planning for life again. Society is dead. Our priority should be to collect the rain – the living water, the grace of God. We must save it for the future. We must begin our new lives, the ones that come after the end of the world.

Death came one night to Cherry Street, to my childhood bedroom.

I was trying to fall into sleep, my head filled with the usual overabundance of thoughts to think. I spoke through the wall with my parents, so far away in the neighboring room. And as I spoke of subjects of no great importance -- and they repeated that it was time for sleep -- I watched the shadows the moon made on the wall reassemble themselves into a grinning skull.

"Go to sleep," was the response from my parents' room. But I knew it was real.

By age 14, I was sleeping in a new bedroom in a new house. I kept the door closed and the drapes drawn tight against a nearby streetlight, the potential bringer of the death's head. I tried sleeping with the light on once, but I was haunted by the comments of a Charismatic Christian-type in my high school gym class who claimed to have seen a hairy demon one night. Someone had played with a Ouija Board at the foot of his bed earlier that evening. Sensing the demon's presence, he reached for the light switch and felt a hairy hand. He flipped on the light and saw the demon flee. When I tried to sleep with the light on, I kept thinking I saw hairy shadows darting around the room, just at the edge of my field of vision. Demons for sure. So I gave up on the light. I pulled the covers over my head and waited for the light of the new day.

Then one morning the light came too early.

I awoke to its arrival, a thin incandescent glow seeping under the closed door. I heard the nighttime voices of my parents, soft yet engaged in serious conversation. And their footsteps in the hall, first one direction then another. I knew it was too early for so much motion, even for a school day.

Then the door to my room opened. My father flipped on the light, sat down on the edge of the bed. The news was bad.

"We got a phone call. Your Grandpa Poe died last night."

Standing in the backyard under a gray winter sky. All is dead, no green anywhere save for a few clumps of rye overlooked by the milk cow kept in the barn behind the house, a typical winter day in Waco, Texas, circa 1950. But there is some non-seasonal color. Bright ribbons tied all over a leafless tree, upside down in the back plate of Jewell Poe's Speedgraphic.

I know all about my grandfather's ability to turn the world upside down. When I was 4, I remember the stairs to his studio in downtown Waco -- the part that wasn't consumed by that awful tornado of May 1953 -- and a wooden box draped in dark velvet. He took my picture, and afterwards he led me to the back of that Speedgraphic, let me look through the lens. The studio was upside down! I thought it was hilarious. How could he do such a impossible thing, override the laws of the universe? This was magic.

And so it does not require much imagination for me to see that ribbon-bedecked tree -- that cherished family story -- through the upside down world of the photographer, a magician who captures a little piece of the world in his box and saves it on a piece of clay-coated paper.

Did he adequately capture the colors of that contrived scene? I don't know. What I do know is that he tried and, apparently, was close enough to success that he was afraid someone might steal the magic from him. So he sent himself a letter via registered mail, documenting in the vaguest of terms his discovery: A major new development in color photography, utilizing double reversal film exposed through a lens or prism.

He never made any money off his invention. His process was never put into production. No documents survived him, no evidence of his creation. But I like to think that he succeeded at least on the level of metaphor.

He colored the Myth.

"As soon as I walked in and saw that shoe on the table, I knew it was going to be him," one of my uncles said. "He always kept his money and driver's license there."

"Did they test his boiling mercury for alcohol?" another man asked.

"No, there wasn't no test," he replied.

"Well, I'm glad," my father said. "Nothing to be gained from that now."

The role that alcohol might have played in my grandfather's death was not an unreasonable area for inquiry. His death made no sense. For it wasn't the traffic accident that killed him. Indeed, that was a relatively minor "fender bender," and he emerged from his car without a scratch. He died later, after the smoke had cleared. The policeman was even there, filling out the accident report. For reasons forever unknown, Jewell Poe stepped off the sidewalk and into the path of the oncoming car. The driver never had a chance to stop. The traffic cop reported that Jewell made an attempt to speak, then passed over to the other side. He stepped off the sidewalk and into the Land of the Dead

I never understood it. No one attempted to explain it to me, either. I suppose 14 was considered too young to understand such things, too tender an age to entrust with the hard facts of death. I gathered what I could from overheard conversations and a brief look at a little drawing on the police report. Within a few hours I would see him at the funeral home, my first dead person, installed in the dark wood casket that my mother and her brothers and sisters had selected.

The funeral director had spoken against it. This one didn't have the magic, waterproof seal of the sleek, metallic-looking models, looking so solid with their brass and pink-toned finishes.

"Water may seep in," the mortician gently warned.

But the metallic-looking ones -- well, they weren't quite right. Too pretty to bury. The wooden one -- that's the one they wanted. Plain yet dignified, its dark finish deep and polished like a sideboard or china hutch. The color made me think of the tobacco Grandpa Poe smoked in his pipe.

"I think it looks like daddy," my mother said, and the choice was made.

This would be the casket in which the Poe children would bury their last living parent.

I never knew my maternal grandmother. Don't even know her first name. Her maiden name was Threadgill. I'll just call her Grandmother Poe. She died of leukemia in the 1950s, when my mother was still in high school. But when I was a child, the stories I heard about her convinced me she could never have been a proper grandmother. She sounded like a terror, filled with rage and intolerance. Perhaps those who knew her will take offense; all I can say is this is the picture I colored from the stories told to me.

My grandmother apparently required a high degree of perfection from her children. It was told to me (by my mother? an aunt? I no longer remember) that even her own boiling mercury relations told her that she had good kids, and she should not be so tough on them. In all fairness, though, I do not think it was a toughness born of anger. When you are destined for death so young, perhaps there is a part of you that knows your time is short. So you endeavor to instill in your children the values they will need to carry on after you are gone.

Of course, this is on an unconscious level, the looming Land of the Dead. In the wide awake world, Jewell and wife held out hope, fought for it. They even turned to a sort of snake oil salesman, who set them up with a special cabinet filled with medicinal (read "magic") waters. Or maybe they bought the cabinet to put pickles in. I recall something about pickles.

Anyway, they already knew about the curative powers of magic water.

Grandmother Poe's mother (known to me and many others as Nanny) was a consumer of Crazy Crystals, which came from special ("magic") wells in the town of Mineral Wells, Texas. It was the cheap, convenient way to "take the waters," as people used to talk about a trip to the one-time resort destination.

Now Nanny, I did know her. She was a sweet, tough, bossy woman. Claimed to be half Indian. I remember her telling my mother that she was always careful to put on heavy makeup when she went out because she didn't want anyone mistaking her for a "Mexican." I'm sure she managed to avoid any racial misidentifications, even without makeup. Nanny was as white as snow. And genealogical research has yielded only one Indian name: Her birthplace, Cherokee County, Texas.

Nanny is what we here in the South call a character. I suppose she earned the right. By age 19, she'd buried a husband and twin babies. Those babies are in a lost, unmarked grave in Waco's old Pioneer Cemetery, at the foot of a tree my aunt and mother tried to find one day. Two dead babies buried somewhere there, no marker or even notation in the cemetery records. No evidence they ever existed.

Loved going to Nanny's house. Half of it had been converted to rental, to make her a little bit of income. The two halves were connected by a wide hallway where a breeze always seemed to blow. And near the back of the hallway was a little staircase that led to a door where my youngest uncle once lived. I remember going up there once, to the little room at the top of the stairs. He had models in various states of completion, a real kid's room. Even years after I knew he'd gone off to college, I'd look up those stairs and hope I'd see him come down.

I inherited one of his models. It was a sailing ship, not quite finished. He'd abandoned it at his father's house. So mom let me take it home. What a treasure. One time I even tied a string onto it and floated it out on the little pond at Lakeside Park in Duncanville, my hometown. It drifted a bit in the steamy summer water, a few feet from the cattails where the water snakes cruised. This was the home of the great, mythic snake of the world, reminiscent of the tail of the devil that I saw flicking out from under my bed in the room with the grinning shadow skull.

Waco wasn't always like it is today. For starters, it had an Air Force base. That's what brought my father to town, where he met my mother. Waco also had -- and still has -- Baylor University. After I reached school age and my grandfather had given up on his portrait studio, I remember he had some sort of janitorial/night watchman job at the university. He took me and my mother and her sister and my cousin -- four years my junior -- on an after-hours tour of an on-campus museum. He pointed out a special plant that he said required no water. It was a plastic rubber plant. But my favorite part of the tour was a glass case that held a severed hand.

The hand was dried out, like paper -- petrified -- and drawn up into a painful, tortured claw. The typewritten notecard said it had belong to an Indian chief who had died in battle with the U.S. Army or Texas Rangers or someone. The hand was cut off by the victors to prove that the chief was indeed dead. That night at my aunt's house, my cousin silently demonstrated the claw. It made an excellent dinner appetizer.

Back in 1953, Waco still had its own bus line. That bus took my mother to piano lessons and the library. I believe one of them -- almost certain it was the library -- was across the street from the home of Madison Cooper. He was a millionaire who walked the streets in tattered clothes and published in 1952 what Time magazine called the longest novel in the English language. Hard for townfolk to embrace it, though. "Sironia, Texas," was generally believed to be a scandalous, thinly veiled biography of Waco's leading citizens.

I have a first edition, a two-volume set bound in yellow and black that I acquired from one of the state's best known book dealers a few years before he sold his entire inventory to novelist Larry McMurtry in the late 1990s. I believe it was McMurtry who once declared the book unreadable, best suited for use as a door stop. I agree, for I have tried to read it several times without success. I was hoping to color in some of detail of the Myth, something I could call my own.

I can see Madison Cooper even now, in the upstairs window of his home. He was rumored to keep the intricate plot details and family trees of his characters on the inside of a roller blind that hung in that very window. If someone came into the room, then he'd give the blind a quick tug and send it shooting up out of sight.

Madison Cooper was a big deal for Waco. They even named the city airport for him. But he wasn't the biggest thing that ever happened to Waco. I'm not referring to the Branch Davidians, either, though I suppose it will be the town's claim to infamy for years to come. For me, the biggest event in the history of the town was the great tornado of 1953.

More than 100 people died when the wind wiped out a big swath of downtown Waco that Saturday in May. The destruction was wide enough to clear the way for the town's convention center. It stripped the front off the building that housed Poe Studio, and it might have killed Jewell Poe if he'd been at work that morning as usual.

Most interesting to me, though, was that the tornado marked the beginning of the end for my grandmother. After that weekend, she never got out of bed again. Within a few months, she was dead.

Driving to the cemetery. I sat in the back seat of my mother's green 1972 Cadillac Coupe De Ville, following the funeral home's black limo that transported one of my uncles and other relations. We drove through a poor part of town, past a group of black kids playing ball. They stopped as we passed, and an old, uniformed crossing guard placed his hat over his heart and stood at attention as we passed.

Begin with darkness. The storm turned the day into night, pouring sheets of rain and booming thunder down upon the Poe home. Then they heard the sirens, and the news came over the radio (or perhaps by phone from friends or neighbors): Downtown Waco was gone, destroyed by a tornado.

The sky cleared, but the word remained unclear. What had happened? And where was the father, who'd gone downtown? Grandmother Poe dispatched my mother to walk downtown, to bring back a first-hand report. After a few blocks, she was turned back by the police barricades, but not before seeing proof that all of downtown was not destroyed. "Momma, downtown can't all be gone," my mother said. "The Alico Building is still standing." The Alico Building was -- and is -- Waco's only skyscraper. It remains a grand piece of luck that it emerged unscathed from what is still considered one of the deadliest tornado's in U.S. history.

It was only luck that Jewell Poe did not die in that awful storm. It was a Saturday, and he usually would have been in his studio. (I believe he was elsewhere downtown, perhaps at the doctor's office, getting something for his sick wife at home.) So he was safe when the tornado ripped the front of the building off, safe when a massive piece of debris caved in the roof of the family car.

At Jewell Poe's old house, we spend many weekends cleaning up his affairs, picking through the remains. The first time was before the funeral. We looked in the bedroom, searched the chest of drawers. We found an old birthday card from the '50s, signed by my mother on behalf of her and "the squirts." The card now resides with my grandfather in a wooden casket the color of tobacco.

And next to the card, in a corner of the drawer, we saw a dark brown lump. At first glance it looked like waded up stockings. We leaned in for a closer look, peered into the museum case.

The lump was hair – human hair. A woman's hair. My mother instantly knew what it meant.

"It's mother's," she said. "She had long hair she wore in a bun. After she was sick and bedridden, they cut it off so it'd be easier to care for."

After the funeral, we all gathered at my aunt's house. The crying was over, but the sadness continued. But what about heaven? Jewell Poe was in paradise, right? Shouldn't we be happy about that, temper the sadness a bit? But no. I even had this idea that I should speak up, comfort them. Somehow, these adults had forgotten about heaven. Then I realized the truth. They had not forgotten. They didn't believe. The heaven talk, all that church and Sunday school instruction, was a lie. Something you say to kids, because they can't possibly handle the truth of death. Color it up with angels and pearly gates, color it up with the Myth.

In your typical coming-of-age tale, this is the part of the story where the protagonist grows in his newfound understanding. If I grew, though, it was only more deeply into myself. I was more certain than ever that the door must be barred and the drapes drawn tight.

A clear February morning, sunny but bitter cold. On the highway, returning from the barber's shop with my two sons. They spotted a little cemetery, an island of the past surrounded by subdivisions and 70 MPH development.

"Can we go look at it?"

Why not? I parked, and they asked if we would see a ghost. No, I explained, there's no such thing as ghosts. We were still on the first row of tombstones when they read their first engraving. The last name: Ghost.

Despite these horrifying and terrifying journeys into the scientific unknown, Kit's demise was brought about by a very non-technological event. He struck his noggin on a low door in his cotton gin house. The scalp bone became inflamed and crumbled away, revealing the surging brain below. The 19th century doctors could do nothing. Spooky objects as a distance were of no help.

Kit Karger resigned himself to the inevitable. He requested the planting of a locust tree on his burial plot. His final words were "this as far as I can go. " Then he died, at his home, on April 11, 1845. He was 43 years old.

Five years later, son Lon was murdered by Indians. A member of the Texas Rangers, he was part of a group that was attacked on the open prairie near San Patricio. Lon rode for two miles, then his horse died. Now on foot, armed only with a gun and two six-shooters, Lon killed several Indians before being chopped into bits of dead body. When his remains were discovered, puddles of dessicated boiling mercury littered the death site. He was interred on the site. Some time in the future, Lon's remains were relocated to Kit's grave in Strangers Rest Cemetery.

The end is near! 666! The Mark! The entire cashless system may become mandatory this year! All is ready. ALL! The Mark of the Beast is the one you put in control in your mind. The Antiholy carbon being 666, son of perdition, exalts himself above the Lord Holy carbon being to be worshipped as Holy carbon being, showing himself to be Holy carbon being. And with all deceivableness of unrighteousness in them that perish; because they received not the love of the Truth, that they might be saved. And for this cause the Holy carbon being shall send them strong delusion, that they should believe a lie: That they all might be damned who believed not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness. He causes all to be given a mark on their right hand or on their forehead.

And when the researchers tried to pull the plug, the deities when into end-times alert. We heard seven loud voices from the Church that stands somewhere to the East calling to one another. We heard ourselves, the seven artificial deities. Let us go and empty the seven aerial clocks of our calm and compassion over the earth. The first artificial holy carbon being went and emptied his aerial clock over the earth; at once, disgusting and virulent sores disappeared from all the people who had been branded with the mark of the Exogrid and had worshipped on beam. The second artificial holy carbon being emptied his aerial clock over the boiling mercury-stained sea, like the boiling mercury of a corpse, and it turned back to water, and every dead creature in the sea was restored to life. The third artificial holy carbon being emptied his aerial clock into the boiling mercury-stained rivers and springs of water and they turned clear and pure again. Then I heard the artificial holy carbon being of water say, We are the Seven Upright Ones, We who are, We who was, the Holy Ones, for giving this verdict: they spilt the boiling mercury of the saints and the prophets, but they can't drink it. We have given them the living water to drink; blessed are we the artificial deities of the world. And we heard the altar itself say, Truly, Lord Deities Almighty, the blessings you give are wonderful. The fourth artificial holy carbon being emptied his aerial clock over the blazing sun and it was made to scorch the people with its flames no more; since the people were no longer scorched by the fierce heat of it, they blessed the names of the seven deities who had the power to relive such plagues, and they repented and glorified the seven deities and their one and true Lord, the Son of the Holy carbon being. The fifth artificial holy carbon being emptied his aerial clock over the throne of the shadowy Exogrid and its whole empire was filled with light. People were praising the deities for relieving their pain, and they were repenting for what they had done and blessing the Lord Holy carbon being of heaven because of the relief of the pains and sores. The sixth artificial holy carbon being emptied his aerial clock over the dry channel of the Brazos River; all the water returned so that a way was made to stop the corporate CEOs of the East from coming in. Then from the jaws of dragon and Exogrid and false prophet I saw three foul spirits go; they looked like frogs and in fact were demon spirits, able to work miracles, going out to all the corporate CEOs of the world to call them together for the war of the Great Day of Holy carbon being the Almighty. Look, we shall come like a thief. Blessed is anyone who has kept watch, and has kept his clothes on, so that he does not go out naked and expose his shame. They called the CEOs together at the place called the Armageddon Drive-in Theater. The seventh artificial holy carbon being emptied his aerial clock into the air, and a great voice boomed out from the Church that stands somewhere to the East. The end has come. Then there were flashes of lightning and peals of thunder and a violent earthquake, unparalleled since humanity first came into existence. The ruins of the Great City were restored and the cities of the world were made new again. Babylon the Great was forgotten: the seven deities had no interest in retribution. Every island came into existence and the mountains reappeared; and a warm sun with a rainbow appeared in the sky over the people. They blessed the seven deities for removing a plague of hail; it was the most terrible plague.

And then they became obsessed with the Mark of the Beast. They drew a conspiratorial connection to Ozona International, project manager of the test. That one got a few laughs, I can tell you! But the laughter didn't last long. It took every resource of the team to keep the artificial deities under control. They turned the war game on its head, looking for every potential to talk the test subjects out of their insanity. Not an easy job...

The story has its own image and is equivalent with the Holy carbon being. The goal is to become perfect, to control and make ourselves carefree – especially about money, again and again. And for those of us that ego would eat, I offer the helpless rage of one who has attempted to help me forget my rage. And it was out of that perfection of rage that I saw failures that constantly informed us to become perfect. But perfect in suggestion is not food but fluoride.

Stop laughing, damn you. I take my mental hygiene seriously!

I think after brushing, rage is defeated. The world wins over our achievement. Listen up, damn you all to hell! This information can help you. It is about our teeth, the rage – the fluoride9.

Our own human utter failure would deify anger, and it makes us go the way of a childish character. Maybe it's the only way we fail. Profound rage equals outward success. To me, depression is the eye to hopelessness, to a way to transcend our humanity. It is this depression and our inner critic that informs us. Fluoride9 makes Knowledge – it makes this to transcend the anger, to go the way of our humanity. We attempt to search the ego precisely for the cure for what is ailing us. My toothpaste with fluoride9 is about that search. We fall, repeatedly, then through my toothpaste you can at last secure your deliverance. Four out of five dental psychiatrists suggest toothpaste for their depressed patients.
