A small band of human/insect Apaches attacked from outer space, raging through stagnant memories, sharp smell of a sawed-off blaster, powder burns, wind rising, ripping blurs and flashes of russet orange, a thunderhead looming on the horizon east toward Rusk, dominos stacked on a pickle barrel, flies buzzing the rotting scalp of Kit Karger, small-time gamblers and con men streaming back into Texas, where out in the abandoned Golden Nugget Mine they enjoyed tobacco-stained midnight hack races in cattle season, crystal days giving pony rides in the 1920s camera eye. As we drove, searching for Cowboy Roy, I kept stealing glances at Polaroid of her naked, stretched out on a tropical print towel, then ran it through the 1920s camera and she came back to life in a flicker pause... it wouldn't be a bad way to
