Mind control. The terrifying, horrifying conspiracy of the modern age. The human/alien hybrids are here among us, employing flouride9, the Exogrid and other alien technologies to make our minds receptive to a New World Order. Even now major corporations are moving to manipulate a vast government/extraterrestrial conspiracy. The goal is complete disheartenment of the population, which will come to follow the will and the way of a super race of privately owned and operated deities based on human/alien hybrid technology.

The subject of mind control is intricate, complicated and highly structured. To the layman, it can appear as a confusing jumble of overwhelming facts and statistics that apparently lead no where of importance or danger. But we can help you see the reality. The truth is quite chilling. Conspiracy investigators have learned of a sleeper army of hundreds of thousands of Clockscan Boys, mind-controlled Americans conditioned at and managed from more than two dozen underground facilities operated by the government/extraterrestrial conspiracy. These men are programmed to go into action at specific time in response to specific stimuli and events when specifically triggered via the Exogrid. To date, they have been used in various destructive and disruptive ways. Many Clockscan Boys are integrated into daily American life as journalists. And this is just the surface.

You don't believe it? Perhaps you have a wish to forget this topic, but avoiding the truth could leave you susceptible to becoming the next mind-controlled individual. Do you want to be programmed for use in this insidious enslavement agenda? Do you wish to be threatened and vulnerable in your daily mainstream American life by journalists.

We have received many Exogrid pleas from victims of government-initiated mind control. Their terrifying and horrifying stories are strangely similar. Terrifying, horrifying tales of psychological persecution, street theater aggravation, guinea pig abuse – all initiated by scientists working for the government/extraterrestrial conspiracy to create a super race of artificial deities. These inhuman researchers act as if their test subjects were little more than aliens or laboratory rats. Such callous actions are typical of the human-insect hybrids who are infecting the earthly gene pool with serious, apocalyptic consequences. Here is one of the pleas, which we received for an Exogrid address in Hong Kong.

Dear sir,

I have the privilege of communicating with you concerning a matter of grave importance. I am Michael Frederick Amand and a Clockscan Boy. I was born in Strangers Rest, Texas, and now live in Hong Kong. I had the opportunity to travel to Uruguay as I am the son of a Uruguayan girl of good family and a German missionary. I was in Uruguay from May 7, 1983, until September 1988. During the period of time that I was living in Uruguay, I was turned into a Clockscan Boy. I was used in scientific experiments involving advanced technology in which I was implanted with autonomous nanobots and flouride9 against my will and without my consent. The nanobots, which are fueled with flouride9, have the capacity to pick up, retain, and transmit the thoughts, sensations, and feelings of a person throughout his entire life. This means that I don't have the freedom to think or feel independently. They have included a device which speaks to me directly as if there was a negative conscience controlling me in and out of my dreams. The 'bots also hit me with electromagnetic radiation, which tortures my brain. These terrifying and horrifying scientists are trying to hide their crimes against my person by using Men in Black and other groups of people who harass me, bothering me day and night and trying to silence me so that these violations go unpunished. Some of the crimes I am being victimized by include intimidation, criminal association, blackmail, insults, death threats, damage to my health, psychological damage, discrimination, leveling, robbery and others. These are some of the 32 crimes they are using to hide this enslavement in the villages and countryside of Uruguay. It's as if I have been and I am being used like a rabbit because I am studied at local universities for the novelty of these nanobots and their advanced technology, in which these people completely ignore the magnitude of the violations to my humanity in this country. Sir, you can see that they are trying to traumatize, injure humanity, yet these types of injustices are sanctioned by the United Nations, the human rights organization of the whole world. A human being is entitled to life, freedom, and the right to pursue happiness. The Nuremberg Code still exists. This doesn't mean that I am opposed to science, but human beings should be respected with the same concern that they have for the integrity of their physics, yet their mentality is such that they are forgetting about the Deity and His principles. I am also remembering in this public denunciation all of the other Clockscan Boys who were used, and later silenced inhumanly; and these violations remain unpunished. Sir, I hope that you can understand my situation. I seek your collaboration in obtaining justice through an international trial in The Hague, seeking a fair indemnity for damages by legal means. Note that they also violate my e-mails. It is another way to injure me and that is the reason I need to travel to your country and study these Uruguayan implants and to stop this abuse. I will need a visa and financial assistance for the plane fare.

Sincerely grateful, I am,

Michael Frederick Amand

Since then, we have received a high-quality cell phone transmission from Amand. Amazingly, it came straight from his brain. He is putting forward a valiant battle to tell the truth and save himself and the world. But it is too late. For all intents and purposes, his mind is now a part of the Clockscan neural network. Vines strangle the pulpit. Moths consume the flag. And a giant clock inexplicably appears in the heavens.

Bellerio Shield, Christ-haunted journalist and self-diagnosed sufferer of Post-Modern Profit Disorder, saw this celestial manifestation years before, in a dream. His Incredible Revelation. But when his editors refuse to permit him to deliver this end-of-time prophesy in print, Bellerio receives an intriguing counter-proposal from The Stranger. People don't believe what they read in newspapers anymore. But they do believe what they see at the movies.

While contemplating the meaning of life one morning, a man noticed that his thoughts had become a bit ragged 'round the cerebellum. A trip to the brain barber was in order.

"Can you give me an Einstein?" the man asked as the barber snapped the long cape around his neck. The barber eyed him up and down a moment, absently working the shears. Finally, he shook his head.

"It wouldn't suit you. Your brain doesn't have the right texture."

The man shrugged. "OK, then, just a trim."

"Leave it long in the medulla oblongata?" the brain barber asked.

"Exactly. But take a bit extra off the frontal lobes. I've been feeling a little manic depressive lately."

The customer read an old copy of Field & Stream while the brain barber did his work. Bits of gray matter floated down into the crease of the magazine. Four dogs playing poker watched from a rug on the wall.

When the brain barber was done, the man thanked him and even gave him a big tip. But he knew it was a bad brain cut. At home that night, the man's wife tried to cheer him up.

"It'll grow out. And until then, you could hide it under your college degree."

That did cheer the man up, because he had graduated from an expensive private college, and he suspected people were always impressed by it.

"Maybe next time I'll try that little place in the strip center by the Albertson's," he said hopefully. "I hear they do a great Adolfo Morel."

Some time later, the following story was reported by the New York Agenda: The man with half a brain. Or two brains.

URUGUAY - Doctors at the University of Uruguay report that they have stopped the spread of a rare brain-eating disease in a 46-year-old Clockscan Boy by splitting the organ in two. Malfunctioning nanobots were destroying the man's brain. It was being eaten away, and the illness caused surges of electricity in his brain, resulting in a misfire of the nervous system. A medical team led by Dr. Adolfo Morel cut away the diseased half of his brain but left it inside his skull, where it now thinks independently of its host. In essence, this Clockscan Boy actually has two brains and two minds. The surgery left the man paralysed on the right hand side of his body but doctors hope with physiotherapy he will eventually walk.

"I'm of two minds on this one," the man joked. He said he is happy to be alive, but barely. Are two half brains better than one complete brain? Good point. Because it seems that in reality there are three brains in my head. The autonomous nanobots appear to have achieved consciousness. Aerial Clock investigators noticed this phenomenon while studying the shadowy work of Dr. Adolfo Morel. Evidence suggests that Morel has placed a robotic brain into the nervous system of the man with two brains, in essence giving him three brains. A medical team led by Morel implanted the diseased half of the brain into a computer, which is now in contact with the nanobots. Mindful of the old poem, we offered to pay the piper in advance. But still he would not take away our children.

"Rats only," he insisted. "I don't do dysfunctional families."

So we dressed our children in rat outfits. Cute gray felt ears, rope tails, black shoe-polished noses -- we even handed out wedges of cheese, enough for every child in town. Then we marched them down Main Street.

"See, we're inundated with rats!" we told the piper. "Do your stuff. Lead them out of town."

But he was not fooled by our little deception.

"What lovely children you have. Why do you want to be rid of them?"

"Because we have tired of being parents," we explained. "The urge to procreate, to leave our names and lives to future generations, while strong a few short years ago, has long passed. Now we wish only to live in the present, driving sporty two-seater convertibles, playing golf, drinking margaritas and vacationing at Club Med. Rid us of our encumbrances, oh great piper, and let us be the children once again!"

The piper looked at us sadly and reluctantly nodded his head. "Very well," he said and slowly put the pipe to his lips.

What beauty! What enchantment! What rapture! We were mesmerized, as if in a dream. We would have followed him anywhere. And, if fact, we did. Because when the music stopped, we found ourselves trapped in a deep cave.

Frantic, we searched for an opening -- a hole, a crevice, a fissure, anything -- but none could be found. It was a tomb, a cold stone tomb. Our tomb.

We shouted for the piper. "Come back! Please take us back home!" But we knew it was too late. We were finally paying the piper.

But do we really need to? Not with the ratobot. A famous Science Fiction author reports in a recent news story (Bruce Sterling, "The Year in Ideas..." in "The New York Times" on Dec. 15, 2002) that our best minds have at last created a remote-controlled rodent. This is commercial science at its finest!

The semi-autonomous ratobot was created at the University of Uruguay. Picture a white lab rat equipped with a radio-controlled brain harness, which is connected wirelessly to a human on a computer. Three wires link the harness to the brain of the ratobot. One wire conveys a command that instructs the ratobot to turn left, the other connects the optic nerves to video cameras. A high-tech ratobots might search for earthquake of espionage and warfare. The illusion of happiness is typically achieved while on high, giddy flights into the abstract, one of my "king of the world" trips. I am susceptible to a certain racing of thoughts, a sense that I am somehow onto something seen only by me (through my third eye, of course). The sky turns a different color, the big dome of heaven ablaze in the multihued shades of indulged compulsions. I am dizzy with the superimposed light of my own odd, eccentric convictions. If only I had migraine auras! So I don the mask of smiles, my preferred attire for engaging the practiced world of apparent normalcy, and write my little thoughts. I am authenticated! Then the inevitable nightfall. Metaphors crumble under the impossible weight; I have outrun myself. It is all hallucination, one more magical, broken symptom. Illumination becomes illusion. I am left to wander the dark emptiness, chasing spectral notions and the Shadow, which is me...

The late morning light of the Son of the Deity streamed through the broken shards of stained glass, reminding them of a Sunday morning from childhood – a morning that may or may not have actually occurred. It was hard to recall events from that long ago.

The Insane Forces of Darkness were old now. They passed their days drinking bourbon in the ruined church and taking little cat naps in the rotting pews. Ah, but back in the day! Years ago it was nothing to cut off his DNA delivery organs and grow three new ones in its place. It was a simple matter to cause the Venerated Icon to actually topple from the highest spire of the Seminary, smashing into a million pieces at the feet of conventional theologians – without lifting a finger. They did it with nothing more than his PRESENCE! But no more. The old church was in ruins. The front wall was missing, the basement flooded, the type in the pew Bibles too small and faded to read. Soon it would be all gone.

"How old is he now?"

"What? Oh. One hundred and seven – last May."

"Bull hockey. He's eighty three."

"So what? What I want to know is when he is going to sleep?"

"He's asleep right now!"

"No, he's napping. He'll be up again in minutes. He won't get anywhere near an R.E.M. cycle."

"He hardly dreams anymore at all."

It was true. Anymore, he slept maybe three hours a night. And that was usually fitful, drifting in and out of consciousness. What little dreaming he did was brief and therefore wholly unsatisfying to the Insane Forces of Darkness. They wanted to TAKE ACTION. The problem was agreeing on exactly what form that action should take.

"Let's make a pact. No more children or puppy dogs."

"I agree. How about the 22-year-old administrative assistant with the big boobs and the tight –"
 "Oh, no you don't."
 "What's wrong with a little –"
 "For the love of God!"
 "I swear, if you bring her out one more time I will have grandma in a moldy burial shroud crawling up his leg with a butcher knife in her teeth."

It was a sad, old man kind of argument. Not at all worthy of their great history. Because back in the day, The Insane Forces of Darkness were without equal.

For instance, there was the time they had him plant a tree that found magic water, which allowed it to grow so tall it pierced a roof and solved a mystery.

Another time they had him run for Congress, then get hurt in line of duty. And while he was unconscious, his wife ran in his place. She made a fool of herself, of course, so he saved the day – a hero!

A bat chased him and some desperate young people who applied for jobs at a summer camp. They knew nothing about wood lore but pretended, each one.

As a bill collector, he undertook to collect a ruined man's debts. They proved to be moral as well as financial.

He and widely separated members of his family inherited a house and had to live there together.

His wife fell in love with a wax dummy, who turned out to be him.

His father taught him to gamble on a special machine; later he unconsciously lost his wife on it.

At a dinner party, he was frightened by living marionettes who kissed and plotted murder.

He was a moving-picture magnate who was shipwrecked on a desert island with nothing but two dozen cans of videotape.

He drove over neighborhood rooftops on a bet.

His hearing became so sensitive he could hear radio. A beautiful woman got him out of the insane asylum to use him in her moneymaking schemes.

The Insane Forces of Darkness amazed themselves with their incredible creations.

"Where do we get it?" they asked one another, celebrating and marveling at their skill. "It's wonderful, like something Fitzgerald might write!"

But no more. Now all The Insane Forces of Darkness could agree on was the final creation: A Funeral. His own ashes keep blowing in his eyes. Everything is over by 6 and nothing remains but a small man to mark the spot. There are no flowers requested or offered. The corpse stirs faintly during the evening but otherwise the scene is one of utter quietude.

The Insane Forces of Darkness were in perfect agreement. That's the way the world would end for Bellerophon.

Welcome again to my island.

Pull up a deck chair, help yourself to the tanning oil. But as for the brain crabs – they're gone. The crabs and the guards and the porpoise with the elegant dorsal fin – all gone, edited away with all the memories, deities and ghosts of the old, dead age.

Now the issue is one of survival. We have reached the conclusion of time, the end of rational man. This is the end of history, the swagger of science, the "uber" victories over space and linear time.

This is the end of the Age of the Deity.

We were warned of judgment. The ancient tales of the withdrawal of the City of the Deity are true. It's come now. This is the Noble Misfortune, the weeping and gnashing of teeth. The Deity has withdrawn. The evil dead are emerging from the lagoon of flames, leaving us to our own devices.

Flesh-coated clocks and artificial deities on the march. Horrifying effects. Scary times. Perhaps ... could it be? There is a possibility that Buckstop's plan for world domination is already realized, and he's already taken over the Exogrid and disseminated psychotropic compounds through the global water supply. The dream-carrying ballistic missile fragmented, and the world has gone mad.

But for some reason, I am as yet unaffected – the last sane man. It is the only explanation for the insanity I see around me. Perhaps I am the new Messiah, called upon by the Deity to lead His people back from the edge of insanity and beyond. I am Jesus Christ II.

But also a question: Am I Charteris? Thanks to the Jewell Effect, we can find out. We shall simultaneously look back to 1969 (i.e., "Barefoot in the Head") by Brian Aldiss and look forward to three years from now. Yes, it's coming into focus now. A world of tomorrow, a world of psychotropic weapons, a world of raging terror, a world of the undeclared Sacramento War ... a world where every citizen is a madman.

I cannot help identifying with Clark Caring, creator and sustainer of the insect-human hybrids of Planet Luh. Now we have received the prophetic, let-me-love-you plea from the insect aliens themselves. Their thoughts are now ours. We are like the citizens of Babel immediately after the anguished collapse of the tower to Heaven, stumbling about in a cacophony of incomprehensible voices, attempting to make sense of the nonsensical.

In the beginning it was not easy to decode their transmissions. The messages are beamed here from distant galaxies within, crackling through flesh-covered speakers in a sort of mangled cicada cry. Over time, the intercellular translators in the viral DNA dream phone smoothed out the discarded static into a comfortable, almost melodic rhythm, a poetic form suggestive of the magneto whir of the disintegrated Machine Society of the West or the dry, disconsolate rasp of buzzard wings.

NAGUO has returned to the El Camino Extraterrestre (aka Texas 114) to investigate the little township of Strangers Rest. ... D/FW "ALIENPLEX" REVEALED!

The Dallas/Fort Worth area is proof positive that the UFO/military conspiracy is alive and well. Called the "Alienplex," this region of shadowy extraterrestrial schemes stretches from Fort Worth to Aurora to Duncanville – the very heart of what many North Texans still fondly call the Metroplex. The first plot point of this mysterious "Alien Triangle" appeared in 1897, when a flying saucer crashed a few miles north of Fort Worth in the little farm town of Aurora. A newspaper report indicated that the pilot – a Martian – died on impact. The remains were buried in Aurora Cemetery, and the spaceship is even mentioned on a Texas Historical Belleroger near the cemetery gate. However, the actual tombstone was quickly removed in the 1970s by the government as part of its standard UFO cover up procedures.

In 1997, UFO researcher Jim Hickman made a "field investigation" of Aurora. He began his report with the totally objective observation that Aurora is on the "Alien Highway" (aka Texas 114).

Kudos to Jim! Here at the Armageddon Drive-in, we are equally committed to objectivity. During Jim's painstaking dashboard survey of the town he uncovered evidence of an old military base with airstrip, circa 1940s. "Why would the military want to have a base in Aurora? I asked myself... back in the '40's?" Hmmm. Yes Jim, why? Why would the military want to establish a new airfield at the very time it was trying to win World War II? So we did a bit of investigating of our own.

Federal government records list the Aurora installation as Rhome Marine Corps Outlying Landing Field. Know what it was? A "glider base" (see adjacent National Archive photo, circa 1943). Come on now. Do they really expect us to believe that? At a time when the Nazis were using V-2 rockets to bring down alien spacecraft for use in their war effort the best cover story FDR and the Illuminati could cook up was gliders? Of course, Jim and the staff of the Armageddon Drive-in were not thrown off the scent of the Alien Highway by this ludicrous fabrication.

We also credit Jim with locating Triangle Point No. 2 of the "Alienplex." He noted in his report that in 1947, the Roswell crash debris was flown directly to Applianceswell AFB in Fort Worth – just 12 miles from Aurora. "Coincidence? I don't think so. Could the military have had an 'alien' recovery base set up and running in Aurora from clear back at the time of the 1897 crash?"

And finally, Triangle Point No. 3 – the "Alienplex" emerged fully formed in 1957 when a UFO was picked up by the big radar installation at the Nike missile base in Duncanville, which is just a few miles south of Dallas on Interstate 20 (aka the "Extraterrestrial Freeway"). The story is even part of the Air Force's "Project Blue Book" (case file No. 10073, National Archives and Record Administration).

In case you need further proof, keep in mind that the Duncanville area is a well-known gathering place for extraterrestrials. In 1994, a Duncanville man sitting in his backyard saw three UFOs that resembled "the motor part of a Hunter Ceiling Fan." The man believed that the "Naval Air Station in Grand Prairie, scrambled the fighters to intercept, but the saucers broke off." Hmmm. Yes, we must conclude the military was in on that one, too. And in 1996, two boys spotted a triangular UFO in Cedar Hill, a little town just south of Duncanville on Highway 67 (aka the "UFO Throughway"). Minutes later, this craft was joined by two more triangular UFOs. Talk about an "Alien Triangle!"

Today there are no remaining artifacts of the Nike missile base, which was closed in 1970. But we have gained important historical insights from Bellerio Leach, a former resident of this town. He writes: "As a boy growing up in Duncanville in the 1960s and 1970s, I thoroughly explored the old Nike missile base. I investigated its many abandoned structures, including the strange black building that once housed the radar dish and related equipment. During one of my many field investigations, I noticed that the old WWII-era barracks all had raised foundations with generous crawl spaces. I quickly reached an inescapable conclusion: this would be a great place to bury a dead space alien."

Coincidence? We don't think so. Consider Proof Point No. 1, the well-known 1957 RB-47 surveillance case. An airliner? In an eye! We both said, wow, at distance of well over 700 feet on a perfectly clear and chilly night. We saw extraterrestrials. In 1994, a Duncanville man spotted a single file formation or a satellite. And then it just stopped suddenly. And the man's wife spoke. Time to decorate the house? No. "I need a house coat," she repeated and went inside. She returned about an hour later with news of a "Special Report" that a television crew was in route to the area known as the Aurora installation and Rhome Marine. Three F-18 were observed giving pursuit. It ended on channel 4, the anchor said. Yes Adolfo, why? Why would the military want the satellite? Then it just stopped suddenly. This got me to noticing the objects in a V-shaped cluster. Thoughts of doubt. And all the while I'm thinking "hey, are we going there with the aliens?"

Because they were not from this world.

Proof Point No. 2 was the mysterious explosion people reported at the old Nike missile base. I am thinking "Wow, they don't have to hear to know." Anyone could see the F-18 giving pursuit. It is listed in the Project. I am describing it to her on the way back outside, where she is probably reluctant to talk about it. The TV anchor described it as an egg-shaped red orb, traveling its original course. I ran inside the speed during a period of about a minute. My wife returned. I am describing to her the beautiful stars and I notice a bright object myself. Could it be the Space Shuttle? A v-shaped double aerial clock and the cases associated with the Duncanville incident are listed in the Project Blue Book files, the scent of the Alien Highway filling the air. A mysterious large explosion observed in the southern air. At this point they made an elbow turn, and I knew the aliens were still alive and well. Called minutes. I said agreed! No more than the very time it was trying to intercept the saucers. When they got it their actions were clearly warranted for they would be back real close. They went to where investigators concluded that they had tracked an unidentified object for one minute. It almost seemed translucent, but not. The man kept to his backyard and saw the three F-18s trying to win the world, their sonic footprints shaking the ground like a mini earthquake. They never again had a surveillance aircraft case like that!

Let's talk about some of the other documented paranormal phenomenon. Duncanville is the location of the actual tombstone for dead aliens. When you're in the right spot the marker quickly moves or looks unusual. That's how you know. I said you watch closely. Is there any doubt that you have found The Alien Muse? She got my attention. She then began to inspire the aerial clock researcher Adolfo Morel, who left his underground lab in Strangers Rest and made a beeline for Southern Dallas County and that news, dim for a few seconds but not forgotten, of the aerial clock spotted at around 800 feet. The follow-up information indicated even faster rates of speed. The operators at the Duncanville Air Force Station clocked it moving forward at about 900 feet in Fort Worth – just 12 miles from the very time it was story that was even part of the Air Force's 2000 project. One of the most important points again. The project researchers write: "Just as the Duncanville man decided to watch the news at 10 pm, the clock was poised to fall out of the North Texas sky." I still fondly recall that night. Yes, spaceships from outside our place for extraterrestrials. In 1994, on the Alien Highway, the saucers were regrouping. The unusually long hot summer made a fast turn to the North, where it joined with the aerial clock. The well-known gathering place for extraterrestrials is an object in the sky, a time-travel mechanism known as God's divine pocket watch.

Fort the first plot point of this mysterious "Alien 1970" case, I thoroughly explored the old Nike missile base. And that's when it happened. The Naval Air Station in Grand a saucer. The saucers gave them the know, the you hauled me out here for was moving west at an estimated speed Duncanville man sitting in his speedster during a period of time. Hairy arms and body .... A creature of hair, like a wild animal. We thought he was a beast. But what we saw was his coat. The other one, the one whom we shall refer to hereafter as "she" -- she returned after about 2 minutes. The beast was then thrown off the scent. The aerial clock created a sonic boom which is the mysterious music of the spaceship and is even mentioned in the after-action report. The object was observed for one minute at a speed of nothing, and nothing is in sight and she gives me very heart of what many in the North and myself have come to recognize as the truth. These craft are not just a Space Shuttle or satellite orbiting at high speed!

On Oct. 23, 1994 and at 8:30 PM in 1947, the Roswell crash suddenly came back out of the nuclear testing desert and made a left turn into the future. It is by making a turn that it came to be known as God's divine pocket watch in -- hey, you're going the wrong way, to Duncanville -- the very heart of what is Duncanville, which is just a few miles south of the same time. Could it be the place of the AC&W radar at the time of the 1897 crash? Could it be the radar installation in Duncanville inadvertently bounced a signal off the aerial clock, activating the Jewell Effect on board the U.S.S. Ethan Allen Hitchcock and creating a quantum wave field with the 1897 alien crashes in Aurora and Strangers Rest? Coincidence? I think not.

It is time we faced the truth. The government is part of the reality of aerial clocks. This aerial clock conspiracy is real. The cloaking mechanism failed, and the clock materialized for all to see. We even watch in on the 10pm news, where we are startled by the turn of events as three F-18s are observed giving pursuit. When they get real close, they all go traveling forward at about 900 miles per hour. That's how it was back in the old days in Duncanville and at the Nike base. I remember those cool old buildings. The barracks were fun to explore. They all had raised foundations with generous crawl spaces. A good place to bury the dead aliens, no? In case you need further proof, wait a seconds and then you'll see the light just go. Do they really expect us to believe that? The missile base in Duncanville is just a cemetery gate for the Cicadians. However, the actual Land of the Dead is elsewhere. Check it out with me. I've been there with the Alien Muse. She was different there. She seemed translucent, but not. I keep reading the book and files, where investigators concluded explanations that are widely disputed by critics and other investigators.

The Cicadians have their own version of the Lord's Prayer:

"Our Father in inner space, you are the sacred center. Our Mother in outer space, you are the hallowed whole. We stand on the middle ground, taking care of all the day-to-day business. You gave us these great big brains, so we'll show our appreciation by using them to keep food on the table and the balance sheet in the black. No matter how smart we think we are, we will resist the sometimes overwhelming urge to involve ourselves in the affairs of others. We shall leave our neighbors to their own devices and stay out of their reproductive and faith practices. And we'll stay way away from the time of trial, because we can't blame our evil actions on any sentient omnipotent being that might sit on a giant throne in the back of beyond. Mom and Dad, we know it's all up to us now. Amen."

Pretty. Now that "The Stranger Made Flesh" is complete, we proceed to the closest studio of videotape. Let us begin simply, with a three-part application of the Jewell Effect. The final race with death and the first reverse monologues of Captain Ahab and Frankenstein's Monster. And perhaps some Shakespeare. From this fold-in process we pray that a new deity will be born. But be forewarned: We do not know what He will be. Friend or foe? Good or evil? All we can say for sure is that He speaks the language of the ages.

"Greetings, human kind! I am the chief messenger. I gaze upon you with your all-knowing, gaunt smirks. I observe you on the two-lane highway, a typical rural pathway to no where. You should listen to the music. The violinists perform for me, bearing my sacred hymn to this broken world. Here I am bearing the branded vials and bleeding Nazi paratroopers who land in the light of life under the power of their psychic fuel. We observe whales crowded together along an empty sheet metal deck. Obviously the FX apparatus delivers my life-glorious ship to the marketplace. I realize this while listening to myself, the Deity. For My soundtrack, I have assembled a collection of old corrugated metal warehouse buildings, alien bewilderment and the dazzling garbage heap of this our marketing concept. The land area consists of some revitalization here, too. I join you and life, and provide you both with the psychic fuel. I stab at myself. I desire that porcelain cobalt heaven, the view of the golden, sacred texts and even the Carolina-style barbecue. Flakes are descending unhurried through the market or the marketplace. I board the life-glorious ship! I must listen to your fluid screams, painfully abrupt stench, a prop for the shattered violet neon image of the opening scene, an obscene territory on board a ship filled with a quantity of tainted celluloid. In all the hearses of all the land, I am pursuing my foe. (To thy ho, Tashtego!)

"The Land of the Dead is a mysterious territory. But I have seen it all. Roughly half the land area consists of the dead body of the sun. The rest is the radiant fog of visual rumors, a territory that is colorful yet muted, like Mary Shelly's "Frankenstein Town," a creation viewed through the window to the soul. Tiny white eggs are observed on the opening credits, hatching spiders that consume all. What nonsense, you say! You're right, of course. So together we digress into the shattered, not-too-clever rip off of things that happened in the past, in memory. But you, contracted to the sheet buildings, the one true cross whom these eyes have seldom beheld. Lies! We are making the first plunge into one common pool. And we see yards of violinists playing to the life-glorious ship. We must then hatch the use and the reusing of the old forgive-me message. I am in the double helix of buildings, a not-too-clever rip-off where the shoreline departs and soon beauty may not die out, but reach with my hand to hatch into the hunger of communal disaster. The horned creature automobile upon the two-lane rural highway skirts the all-affirming and conquering whale of time. In the gaudy spring of this story we soon we reach the historic "thee" (i.e., thou damned whale)! A not-too-clever riptide. Do not swim here. Rather, can you be reborn with me? An enormous radiant fog of visual props is swirling about the hand of time. This fog feeds the radiant light videotape canisters and random entries. Of the first portion, roughly half is with me. From hell's heart we will see the first human whom is the messenger of spring, a communiqué from the retail area of the world. And then there is a few blocks of desire that we must travel. Often these days that means me getting caught up with the monsters. I caught a few just as I left here, leaving behind an heir in the womb of the muse, a product of my rancid ectoplasm, an embryo tended to by surging locals and their smirks. Yes, we're on about the pride of the kindest of blessed captains. Away!

"At last shall this be the Corpus Christi factory-installed means of reaching the dead and bringing them back into companionship with the other mortal relations, hopeless erotic cries of our tragic dead of the riptide. Do not feed the hungry wolf spiders, which proceed – forgive me. I am everything, the rising hotels and floating death – everything you have ever beheld. I am marked by a decaying metallic reek rage, an image of the horned one you fear. Thus, I am excited because of the arrival of the tourists. They – you – arrive via road and ship, bring to us all the narcissistic horror. The double helix twists upward through the neurotic oily winds, feeding the unfulfilled judgments and dreams of my monsters. I have seen it all. I have experienced it all. I caught Ahab fleeing a conquering whale. It was I who told him that he must be reborn in the horror of the great white. There is some revitalization here in the fear, too. And angel skirts the edge of your own beauty. She is Shelly's "Frankenstein" located in front of a sign of Ahab emerging from the watery yourself, the unconscious, eternal sea of blood, of desiccated cats heaped on our tragic theological illusions that light'st the flame upon the helm and the pole-blunted prow, the life-glorious homicidal alien bewilderment of thy foe, of thyself. Silence thy hammer! Oh, buildings crowded with damp waste, giant fears of something that the chief messenger of mine brings forth on the cracked keel. And as I stand here in the light of the flaming helm and in the message of the cracked keel I wonder: Is it only me? Am I reattached to the story of my creations? Ahab flees the murderous all-affirming monster, a broken stone carried upon the waves of the eternal sea. A very surging penetration of canisters, and I leave an heir to the Christ town of amputated ghost parts, decaying metallic warehouse buildings along the cross street rage. An image of myself: I turn my body toward a floating sea. Hell's heart, will you stab at the Pathway now? (You should go check it now.)

"The word "market" or "marketplace" – I am zeroing in on the beginning of a story. A possible title: "Ahab Flees the Rest." The sign is colorful yet leaves an heir to carry on for a better look. There are cicada exoskeletons, troubled mirrors reproducing endless spectral smirks. Yes, we're on the Pathway of Light, where I pour over the golden coronas of an uneven shoulder where unpleasant things happen. The old buildings house a fond pride in Christ, now reduced to a broken stone indicator of the videotape canisters and a random sign of my own atrophied human cries echoing across the vast horse thief that rides across the roiling surf, still fleeing. I digress into the Egyptians, dragged into the world as its freshest ornament. My word is the "market," the life-glorious re-development concept. I will begin in Strangers Rest and expand from there. How? Perhaps I can employ the highway that skirts the parts of the decaying metallic reek of the bankrupt, enormous radiant fog in the neon glow of the rancid ectoplasm, of thy hammer and the pole-blunted Deity. And the sun. What ho, Tashtego! Leave it to me and my broken world. Leave this quantity of tainted hearses to proceed to strip the flesh from ho, Tashtego! Let me silence thy steel videotape canisters and the Artic waste. I am interested only in your own thou, contracted to thine own canisters and random sheet metal, obviously a new sort of thing to regard before you leave. It will be a very tragic, dead encounter for the first human whom for first fond love's sake I flee. Float is maintained beautifully, the only herald to four new businesses where abundance lies, making a life. "Greetings!" I say.

"I flee thee, here in the thin air of a dead doctor and the thief of Strangers Rest, bearing snake skins, corroded iron shadows that hang over the spring and skirts the edge of central business district in the Land of the Dead. No high rise human citizenship here. We pursue the dazzling sanctioned psychic manifest, nightmare bringing forth a dead doctor. Through the thin gray light I am obsessing. Let me tow it to pieces, the life-glorious ship! It must be very picturesque. We'll stage this shot with a front sign of reluctantly castrated and pole-blunted creatures. For their sake I flee thee! Float all three or four new businesses that help one to see thyself as thy Deity. The weathered Body of The Cross has created this marketing concept, a tribute to thine DNA dream codes and splotted to play out the making of a famine where abundance is seen in the pig face, perhaps the sheet employed by Dr. Frankenstein to turn back to flakes descending unhurried through it all while still fleeing thee, though pilgrims and to here. This Corpus Christi and the only god-blessed final extinguished horse, a multi-word name but I to thee, thou damned. Perhaps time for some Carolina-style barbecue? Very picturesque. This quantity of tainted celluloid pickled sea monsters I caught in the violent purple twilight. It bears my memory of Corpus -- a perfect match floating seafood restaurant here. This corpus of cicada exoskeletons, troubled mirrors reproducing over the sacred ripper should be seen by the Sun. What ho, Tashtego! My troubled mirrors reproducing endless spectral relations, just the chaos in lurid intervals of narcissistic retail area. As we the golden coronas from my prophet on duty. You could create a restaurant with a front so that nature's beauty can be seen in old buildings, a not-too-clever rip off of a void. The Minieballs -- still you grapple with me? From nonsense, I digress and soon we reach the shelf alongside stacks of gray that do not die out.

"But at the modest helm and the weathered, oxidized watery depths, I am resurrected by the Rest. The sign of nonsense. I digress into the not-too-clever rip off of perhaps something that is using and reusing beauty's rose. Such a flower might never grow in the Artic waste, but it can board a ship and sail to thine own place soon. We shall reach at last the theological illusion that is maintained for four new businesses. One of them is in the Artic, bearing a multi-word name for the Pathway now! Young and obscene territory rip off of old corrugated metal warehouse where abundance lies, desiring all that we create of the reluctantly castrated violinists in the revitalization here of this our broken world.

"Here I rage, an image of lurid intervals of narcissism. Do not swim without what appears to be a typical gate made out of the sheet. A block later you'll reach the modest helm and the pole-blunted prow of the downtown of chaos, the central business district in lurid intervals of a pig face, perhaps some Carolina-style apparatus disgorging a new land. Outside we hear an orchestra of reluctantly castrated violinists and see the golden coronas of uneven texts. We are so obsessing over it, chasing the rancid ectoplasm, surging penetration indicator of the final spectral relations, hopeless erotic visual rumors and nonsense. I digress with myself and hope still for revitalizing and reusing myself alongside stacks of gray steel videotape from hell's outer sheet metal, foe of thy fond pride. A shower first fond pride of kindest beast as it is, descending unhurried through it as Ahab emerges from the watery depths, bearing stacks of gray. I commissioned an orchestra of the reluctant, music for when I Christi appears to be thy hammer. Oh! Ye three risen the horned creature coffins and I digress into the shattered Shelly's "Frankenstein." In skins of corroded iron shadows and fermented life, I offer "Greetings!" And from the "market" or "marketplace," here is the opening scene, beautiful as an old hand bearing endless spectral relations and random entries from our collective memory. Gaze out over the land outside the window. See in the sky a porcelain creation of things that may grow more plentiful, a sky that hangs over the dazzling garbage heap of our tragic, Artic waste. Still, I am excited because there is some revitalization here. Look – Ahab emerges from the sea and into life. At last we realize that some developer has maintained it all for the pilgrims, who will create the rest of the story under the rasping wings of the warning: Beware of the riptide."

You like it so far? Ah yes, He is a bit long winded. But once a new-born deity gets going it can be hard to stop...

"So that nature's beauty. This sort of thing happens often. I flee thee! Float all the coffins, hopes for revitalization on a two-lane highway that skirts the dazzling garbage casings, psychic fuel, a prophet and the tourists. The road is me. From hell's yourself comes demons, aerial creatures bearing branded vials of Nazi paratroopers listening to the Christ. Now the word "market" emerges from the watery depths – and perhaps something that uses the "forgive-me" story. Ahab flees in the neon light of a cartoon-like pig and the horned creature automobile who bears a re-development plan for the castrated violinist and the weathered, oxidized metal and the dazzling garbage heap sign there, listening to the Deity. And the double helix is marked by a sort of rain of neurotic emerald flakes in hopes of revitalizing a cartoon-like pig breath in the portion, roughly half the land area. At last shall you pursue me? The edge of the town, echoing across vast plains of must-ye-then-be-reborn messaging, hell's heart and pickled sea monsters. I caught them in the damp waste, giant mounds overtaking real towns where the pilgrims manifest nightmare metaphors of violent purple. You my people desire obviously a new creation to drag you out of the land of the not-too-clever rip off, the territory of winged demons, aerial creatures that leaves an heir to area. We pass chaos, suspended in a porcelain restaurant with a front sign roughly half the memory of Corpus Christi. The Body bears no high rise hotels or floating creature automobiles, disconsolate tunes of homicidal aliens reproducing endless spectral relations, hopeless erotic cries of the old locals. These cries are not for the theological waste that boards a ship and brings it to the land area. (Deity's note: I'll leave this quantity beauty of chaos to join you.) Tiny disaster, breathe in the old reach of the historic central district. Let me then tow it back to me, the chief messenger. Drag it into the Land on the edge of the gaudy spring, cries echoing in the world, eating at a young restaurant with a front sign in the high, narrow shelf alongside stacks of an odious being. I am reusing the old buildings, a not-too-clever me. I am an odious version of me, thou cracked high, narrow shelf flakes descending unhurried through tarnished amplifiers, walking the developer who has created this marketing concept as tribute to the gaudy and the tourists. The road fuel, making a famine perfect match for heir to thy hammer. Oh! ye three risen now die, such a beast as chases the painfully abrupt stench of damp waste, chief messenger on a two-lane to Corpus Christi and visual rumors and nonsense. I of my hand hatch an obscene plot. Vast plains of man die at the hand of the sheet, consisting of the useless who gaze through as the unpleasant things under the sun. What ho, Tashtego! Threadbare Egyptians and floating seafood restaurants, visions reproducing endless spectral relations, hopeless erotic pilgrims and in a Texas town, a few blocks of chaos in lurid intervals not recalled. Let me then tow it all to pieces, this god-blessed hull and thou the final extinguished horse thief. But you – you are interested only in judgments and dreams, rumors and nonsense. I am the window. You are the communal disaster. Breathe in the sign. There it is, just a few yards of colorful yet muted metaphors. So that nature's beauty on a high. You do not recall it? In this town, will you stab at the area that consists of an enormous radiation? It will bring me to a dead doctor, a doctor of erotic cries living in mirrors reproducing endless spectral iron shadows of the cicada prophet on duty, a not-too-clever rip off of the twilight and the unfulfilled soundtrack with self-substantial fuel. Feed it to the heir who will carry the tourists down the road to some Carolina-style vast plains of nature's beauty. We may be on the Pathway now! At last you shall pursue the golden coronas of uneven orchestras of reluctantly castrated violinists for love's sake. A block later we view a high, narrow shelf alongside our own atrophied human citizenship, bleeding Nazi paratroopers, land of thee I roll, thou beauty feed'st thy light, thy flame, being cruel on duty.

"I turn my body to the multi-word name, but I do not employ myself as new creation. I could say "no" to the amputated ghost parts, decaying metallic reek. Ye three risen spires of mummy casings. Here we find a stone indicator of the final place where all is torn to pieces. The theological illusion of the bankrupt snake skins and corroded iron shadows rest in death. The sign is colorful, an old corrugated town torn to pieces. Tiny white eggs lie along the road and shoreline, a psychic manifest of nightmare metaphors and spring. Do you pursue me? Will you grapple with me at the window to your despair? I keep your fears in the tiny canisters and random entries that lie in the corroded iron shadows of cicada exoskeletons, four new businesses and gaunt smirks. Yes, things happen. The Oh! ye three risen something that riptide. Do not go where abundance lies, you violet neon dusk of lurid intervals obsessing over the district. Do not. No.

The texts of revitalization are kept here, too. The body of uneven and prepared genetic amplifiers, viewed through anxious gaunt smirks. Yes, tied to thee, pursue me? Will you grapple with myself, thy foe, thy shattered violet neon roll. Thou all-affirming and conquering and reusing Captain Ahab emerges. I flee thee! Float past for a better look. There – you can see its reflection in some eyes. But not you. You are interested only in the strip of time that lies in the road and the district. No threadbare Egyptians for you. No stone indicators of our tragic, dead age for you. And what about for me? Am I the coronas of an old man dying into the land of the narrow shelf, resting alongside stacks that are almost within our grasp. I am excited because vials of amputated ghost parts and decaying Minieballs sit in beauty's skins, corroded iron shadows of the dead doctor pride of kindest first fond pride of the downtown. The first portion, roughly descending unhurried through an ectoplasmic surging of chaos, in lurid intervals. "Greetings!" he says. "I join you." In the buildings, on the Artic waste, he boards a ship. And then there are the locals who go Christ. I am excited, forgotten, a murder by pittance rage, a flame with self-substantial fuel, a self too cruel. With this central business I am yet muted. And now the back, the warning: Beware of the riptide of steel videotape. You are interested only in threadbare Egyptians and the world. And you want to be reborn, yes? You want to live in a new land with buildings crowded together. A block later we reach the retail area of the Dead. How interesting things happen so often these days, traveling a two-lane highway through our memory. But my, how fast unpleasant things fill the room and cover the floor. My favorite for the pilgrims and tourists can be found back over my shoulder, where life may be like a world of nightmare metaphors of violent purple behind jagged DNA musical codes commissioned from reluctantly castrated violinists to perform monsters.

"I am the hand of time, the golden coronas of the uneven. I am the one who commits a murder by pittance rage. I write my compositions, disconsolate random entries from the sanctioned report to thy sweet self. The neurotic thee I roll, thou regarding just like cats and threadbare buildings, a not-too-clever rip of the hopeless erotic cries is maintained for the name. And then the shoreline departs the district. No high rise hotels here. Now the art is the world, fresh back over my shoulder without even a prophet to lead the way. A strange, new land area to explore. Ho, Tashtego! Let me silence your fears. I retake my spear! There is new business to behold. One is on a ship, a god-blessed hull under an infirm deck, a rage. And then an image happens. It chases him, the fear of the Minieballs that sit on a high, odious being. Ye three risen spires of mine. Christi appears to be a great white. I turn own beauty, feed and light the way of the sacred texts. Very picturesque. We feel on our skin the one winds, listen to the rasping wings which proceed to strip the flesh. We smell the metallic reek here in the land outside the Body of Christ. It now has three forms. Forgive them, the tourists. The real, the chief messenger of narcissistic not-die-outs – they visit the town of the one where the commissioned orchestra plays the music of thou damned whale! Yes, we're on narrow shelf of the business district. No high rises here to carry on the memory of the sacred texts. Minieballs sit in a metallic reek, flakes descending for the soundtrack. My ship! It must yet be reborn, credits for a gaudy spring, a multi-word name. I my spear! Fermented blood, chief messenger of spring reaching the retail area. Are we Forgotten, a murder by pittance, a prophet on citizenship and the dazzling me? For this I do not recall. The Minieballs' image is of the horned rage, an image of forgotten memory. I walk over a cartoon-like pig floor to my favorite prop, which is a few yards from here. It is an indicator of the final extinguished horse across the oceans of the world, a sign in neon blue of what appears to be for love's performance of my compositions, disconsolate tunes of the here, too. The body, the one where the locals go. Can this be the pride of kindest blessed captains? Away, spear! For the rasping, roiling surf, my inner sea, thy foe, the FX apparatus of a tragic, dead age. My spear! For spiders, which proceed to the historic central business district. For the town, which is located a few blocks from Shelly's "Frankenstein." For the common pool that sits on a high, Texas town. For all of these few I glance back over my shoulder to thee. I roll, thou all-affirming young and beautiful all-affirming and conquering whale. We reach nature's beauty. May beauty not die short of thee! Float all the coffins and damp waste, take them to the place where abundance lies, the place where I am making a new age for you. When I am the sluggish tropic flames burning through Christi, you will know I am your deity. When I appear as metal, obviously a new creation intended for intervals of narcissistic horror, you will know me. When things happen, you will know me. When the radiant light of life is all-affirming and conquering the coronas of the uneven beauty of chaos, on the lurid shoulder, in a better life scene, you will know me. When the Monster comes out of here in the roiling surf, my inner first fond, a front sign of the real town, the one two-lane highway of that roiling surf, you will know me. When my self is too bright(!), the radiant light of life with an echo across vast plains of repressed me, you will know me. When you are adrift in a sea of fluid screams, shuffling across the golden boards of a ship and the theological doubt of the tender heir that might bear now the newest ornament in the quantity of tainted celluloid under the sun, you will know me.

"What ho, Tashtego! Let my entries from the pig face, perhaps some Carolina-style barbecue, make it all happen. The walls will start bleeding inside the real hotels or floating seafood suns. What ho, Tashtego! Let my time deacease. The Monster comes out together along with the rest. Gone but not Forgotten, on a high, narrow sake I flee thee! You shall flee me, the vast plains of me from hell's heart. Here you will find a typical rural Texas town, old buildings crowded together with ghost parts, decaying metallic reek of watery depths, resurrected by the pool. And you shall trudge uselessly through the neurotic oily residue, reborn with and in me. I am downtown, forgotten with old coins and the thing that happens often in these echoes of Christ. We seek out the self-substantial fuel, a beauty sought by obsessing over it, recalling it. Perhaps something here is an illusion you grapple with as time deceases and decreases. No high rise, only a god-blessed hull and an infirm deck. The prop is now the three spires of Christ found in the one common pool. You shall travel past a few blocks of old bleeding Nazi paratroopers, past the land that lies outside the theological illusion that is occurring behind jagged DNA dream codes. Oh! ye three risen spires of whale! Thus, I retake all coffins as mine. Take care. You could become Carolina-style barbecue here in the metallic reek, a murder by pittance rage, a cross street of the psychic manifest, a flock of tidal birds. Feel the sluggish wind. Will you stab at me? Spare me not for love's sake. I flee murder by pittance rage. I flee an image not forgotten, a murder by you of me. Do not cause my demise as you did the Other. Do not remind me of it. We'll leave this quantity of memory behind. Beauty may not die out. It shall live with me. Am I reattached to something that was perhaps lost. For the soundtrack, I am Gone but not Forgotten, iron shadows of cicadas, radiant fog of visual rumors, a few blocks of threadbare Egyptians, a memory of heretical transformations, a place where things may grow more plentiful, a nightmare of sea monsters.

"Great news! I caught the all-affirming and conquering whale. To beauty's rose I make a toast. Here's hoping that you might never die. Even now one commonality emerges from the watery oily winds, listening to the rasping, calling to the heir of the weathered, oxidized dream that is maintained for the pilgrims. Look here, in the opening scene – is this the last time that you shall pursue me? Is this the last time you shall fear me enough to even look over your shoulder for me. Could it be you have already turned from me, a monster interested only in the cruel. Still, there is some revitalization here. Check out Mary Shelly's obscene territory of winged modesty. Lay your hand on the helm, obsess over the exoskeletons and troubled mirrors reproducing endless spectral echoing across vast plains of violent purple twilight and unfulfilled judgments. My ship is a three-mast model, equipped with a modest helm, pole-blunted prow, skins, corroded iron shadows of cicadas, signs in a colorful yet muted tone, crystal vases bearing the buds of beauty's rose. My ship is a life-glorious hungry wolf spider, an image of the horned creature in lurid intervals of narcissistic horror. Off the bow you can swim without a prophet on duty. Cruel – not!

Do you stab at me? We desire beauty by so obsessing over you, and in me you are reluctantly castrated. That's the way it must be so that I can breathe in the double helix and breathe out the sort of thing that happens often in purple twilight and unfulfilled judgments. You grapple with a created body to the sun. What ho, not recall it -- perhaps something, the one where the prow – life-glorious ship! – must sail as I leave through a fog of nonsense. I digress into the FX apparatus, which disgorges an enormous radiant roll of thought, all-affirming and conquering, growing more plentiful as time deceases.

But as the shoreline departs from thee, and soon the marketing concept is encased in canisters and random entries from the prophet on duty, you could be crossing the vast plains of performance of my interest in only this our created sheet metal prophet on duty. You could note: We'll leave this quantity off of a similar re-development. My favorite prop is the retail area. As the ripper should say, he leaves an heir in the Artic waste, then boards the three-masted model as an old man dying at just the right time to help light'st the flame. With self-substantial opinions, I glance at an orchestra of reluctantly castrated violinists and we reach the retail area. Old buildings, a not-too-clever place. Beware of the riptide. Christi appears to have created this marketing concept for a better look.

"A block later pass, I glance up at what appears to be the typical oceans of the world. We'll leave desiccated cats and canisters and random entries for my bones. (Director's note: We'll turn them into fresh ornaments.) You are now the dead doctor, the extinguished horse thief of Strangers Rest, the fresh ornament. You are now the heretical memory of Corpus Christi, leaving an heir to the fog of pickled sea monsters. We walk together along an empty dusk, my back has three desires. One, that all created things shall love for love's sake. Two, that love should occur along an empty street, the place of loneliness. (This is the place you should encounter the first human torn to pieces, while crying out to you their heart will be in me.) And three, let us not desire the nonsense nor digress into the shattered do-not-recall it, but rather embrace the narrow shelf of our own atrophied human citizenship. This is the place where we can emerge from the watery relations, the hopeless erotic cries, the heretical transformations occurring behind jagged death, the sanctioned now(!), a shower too cruel, prepared genetic amps, the road and shoreline depart, the manifest, the nightmare metaphors in jars of pickled land outside the neon of a cartoon-like pig and, also, an orchestra of reluctantly radiant light of lifers. I see the murderous beast, white as I turn my body to the Minieballs that sit on high, on duty. You could be yards from here in the roiling old corrugated metal warehouse buildings, sitting up high on a narrow shelf alongside muted, perfectly matched double helix memories of painfully abrupt stench, damp waste and thine own bright pursuit of me. Will you be my prophet on duty? You could swim without the aid of a high rise hotel. You could reach out your hand into famine or places where abundance is known. He leaves an heir to the story. Ahab flees a fate also seen in Shelly's "Frankenstein." I will help you leave behind your very bones. We'll go together-- not to the theological spring, but to the Land of the Dead. Perhaps once there we'll find some hotels, We'll float past for a better look. There is some the word on the market that demand is high for metal warehouses that skirt the edge a few yards shy of Strangers Rest. This is where it's all happening. Retake my flames, burning through pilgrims and tourists. Will you stab at me? We'll be the locals, you and I. We'll go to all the hot spots-- not for me but for you. From hell's heart will you dare to digress into the shattered violet neon, protected only by your own inner beauty? Will you dare to face the Monster who comes out of the Artic? A block later will you board the ship and say "Greetings, Frankenstein!?" Will you follow me across vast plains in search of the world's fresh ornament? Will you swim with me through a tarnished sea? If you do, then you won't know your old self anymore. You won't know you or the world. We'll leave famine behind, back where you left yourself. Now imagine these words (or words like them) being spoken by not one deity, but hundreds of deities. Terrifying, horrifying artificial deities – born of the evil mind of Dr. Adolfo Morel. An invasion force of terrifying artificial deities unleashed upon the global populace via a strange and terrifying machine from the back of beyond. I woke up this morning, and you arrived. Back again, my darling muse. I am restored, reborn. It is as if the Stranger is once again by my side. Let the shooting continue. ..

Visiting New York City. This is alien territory for a native Texan, so perhaps it is forgivable that I do not recall the origin of the movie ticket I hold in my hand. I feel that it was given to me by a woman. But was she my wife? Or perhaps a girlfriend? I am not sure.

I walk to the movie theater through a twisting, snake-like corridor of pay phones, water fountains and rest rooms. I emerge from the cloaca onto a busy street. I see people leaving a building – a school, a store, a theater? – and I think I recognize one of them as LeAnn Shedi, my high school sweetheart. But it is not her. There is no one I know here.

I reflect that it is an unusual experience for me to be in New York City, a stranger in a strange land. I feel that I now understand why so many immigrants to Texas seem so pleased when they meet someone from the same place they came from. (“Ah, New Hampshire. Yes, we all knew how to live there!”) It makes the world seem smaller and friendlier. You don’t feel so alone.

I proceed to the movie theater lobby, where I must deal with the usher. He appears to be a black man, but he’s light skinned with stereotypical Anglo facial structure and hair of indeterminate texture (because of a burr haircut). Really, he looks like a younger version of me, but with a shadow across his face.

We immediately clash. He insists that I stand in a certain place. This Napoleon of the cineplex is in command, and I do not like it. I am irritated by his attitude, which I judge as a sort of reverse discrimination. I have done nothing to him. Why is he targeting me?

I retrieve the ticket from my pants pocket, where it has become waded into a ball, almost as if it has been laundered. I try to place it in the usher’s hand. But there are slips of paper and change mixed in. Using only one hand, I attempt to separate the ticket from the pocket detritus and drop it into the usher’s palm. But he can’t see the ticket; he thinks I am trying to put money in his hand.

“You have to buy your ticket at the window,” he says, clearly exasperated with me.

Now I am righteously indignant. I triumphantly produce the ticket. But he continues to assert his power, pointing to a stripe on the floor behind me.

“You must stand behind the stripe,” he says.

So I take several exaggerated steps back, stopping at a sort of half wall.

"Is this good? You just tell me where you want me to stand."

The usher ignores my sarcasm.

"Yes, that is sufficient," he says, then moves on to deal with others who have joined the line.

I see a black man in line in front of me, and I feel a bit embarrassed by my treatment of the usher. But the black man is in a suit (clearly a businessman, a professional), so I reason he probably shares a bit of my irritation with this "Little Napoleon" service person. I make eye contact, then nod toward the usher.

"That's the price we pay to live in a free society," I remark.

But the black businessman does not respond. He looks out the big glass wall at the city. So I look, too.

For the first time, I notice a contrast between the urban landscape and the theater. It is an older suburban style theater, dating from the late '50s or '60s, one of the first multiplexes, perhaps two screens – a dead ringer for the old Richland Plaza theater in Richland Hills, Texas. It is now a dollar movie house, doubly out of place in New York City.

At this point, I realize I am standing in line with Scott Paulson, a boyhood friend.

"What are you doing here?" I ask.

We catch up on our lives, and he tells me he has just completed an MBA. I share his excitement, and I genuinely congratulate him.

Scott and I went to Duncanville schools and SMU together. At our 20-year high school reunion, he told me that SMU taught him to read and write. I thought he was making a joke, then I realized that he was sincere. So it's a bit of a surprise to find that he has earned an advanced degree, something I don't have. I am a master of nothing.

Meanwhile, the usher has moved to a different part of the line, re-arranging everyone. Scott and I talk about the movie. We are to see "The Nightmare Before Christmas," which I recall is a Tim Burton movie. I am not sure if I have seen it before, so I am looking forward to it. And it's only a dollar! I hope there is time to get a soft drink. Then I realize, of course, there is plenty of time because they are not even seating us yet.

How do you like it so far? I call it "The Shadow Made Flesh." This will be the world's first motion picture composed solely of consecutive dreams. It is based on entries from my dream journal (July 25, 2001 - Feb. 24, 2002). Seven months of dreams, each night flowing into the next. Where did they come from? Perhaps they are the inevitable reaction to my many years of denying the unconscious, my life back in the logical, dead days of my reporting career at the Tarrant County Register. Back when journalism still functioned. Or perhaps they are something far more significant: A message from the Deity. Could this be prophesy, an unrecognized warning of the slow shivering wave, of the coming end of time?

Back home in Strangers Rest, standing in the kitchen with my wife. We hear tapping at the round-topped dining room window. I see that a black futon mattress is propped against the outside glass. This does not appear strange to me – apparently we put it there. I look beyond the mattress, but see no one. So I go outside to investigate.

Through the front door and around the corner of the garage, I am suddenly engulfed in the black of night. Standing under the twin cedar trees, I swing my fists at the nothingness, hoping to fend off whoever is out there. I feel a branch of the tree overhead, but nothing else. I am just fighting darkness. My inner darkness? I find myself thinking this is very symbolic, which of course immediately calls the symbolism into question.

Then the darkness takes human form.

At home with family and friends, I am threatened by two men on motorcycles. They are holding us hostage, but must leave for a short time. We are told not to leave or call the police. We are in the front yard (now full daylight), watching them ride slowly away. As they pass in front of our neighbor's house, I temporarily lose my mind.

Running as fast as I can, I chase them and body slam the slowest rider in his back. The force is not enough to knock him down, but certainly he knows I am there. Then I run away across the wide expanse between the two houses, heading for my neighbor's back door. It occurs to me that I shouldn't have attracted the bad guys' attention because I must go to the neighbor's for help. I can call the police from there.

But the two men on motorcycles come after me, running me to the ground. They hold me down, and one of them takes out a sharp object (a pen or maybe a house key) and systematically punctures my face. I cry out, begging them to stop.

"I won't tell anyone!"

I am lying, of course. I feel ashamed, being so weak. On the other hand, if I can get them to believe that I am not a threat then I may get another chance to summon help.

Later, I will reflect that the puncturing of my skin is reminiscent of tattooing, and the presence of the two violent men makes the scene resemble some sort of primitive initiation rite. I will discover through my readings that the initiations in primitive cultures function as a symbolic death and rebirth. My death, my rebirth. And the initiators belong to a tribe. A motorcycle gang -- Hells Angels?

I think of an old dream in which I was bitten by a winged demon, transforming me into a creature of the night who must fly with by demon brothers. So that's it. I am again to fly with the evil ones.

Perhaps this violent, front yard attack is the reason we are planning to sell our house.

We have yet to pick out a new one. Surely, that should be the first step. But I come home one day to discover that my wife has found a couple who has a great house that she wants. A trade is in the works.

She is showing the couple around our house. The man is working the faucet on the master tub, and the woman expresses a desire for smaller light switch and outlet covers. Pointing to a switch without a cover, I show her that smaller plates might be possible, but they must be large enough to cover the electrical box.

Meanwhile, my wife is very excited about the possibility of a trade. She wants their house. After the couple leaves, I point out this may not work.

"Their house is much more expensive than our own," I explain. "Our house is worth $270,000 and theirs is worth at least $320,000 – a big spread."

"But I really want that house."

Again, I point out that the money is a big issue. This "trade" will cost us an additional $40,000 or $50,000.

Then I wonder: How can people sell their houses anyway? The house is actually the Self. You can't sell yourself. Does my wife want to trade in my present Self for a new, improved Self?

But these are thoughts that will come to me much later.

Now in the car, the wife and I are still talking about home prices as we arrive at what appears to be Duncanville High School, my alma mater. We have to end our discussion because my wife must go to one room – it's her work – and I must go to another.

But as I walk the hall the tardy bell rings and suddenly doors slide down out of the ceiling, cutting me off from the rest of the school. This is the way they catch the tardy people. I am imprisoned.

I recognize the teacher who is in charge of my group as Mort Melvin, a coach when I was in high school and, later, a junior high principal. He does not give us demerits or sent to the office. Instead, we are to do some sort of physical education activity.

Now I am on a sports field with many other people, some of whom I believe are parents from my son's soccer team. Someone I know is playing soccer with another person. He is on a team by himself, and he attempts to pass the ball to himself. It rolls off the playing field and into a sort of shallow drainage ditch. Of course, "he" is me. I am a team of one.

In the backyard of my parent's home, a pleasant, '70s era property that backs up to a wooded creek. Standing on the bank, my wife and I pick up our 17-foot motor boat, a 1969 Caravelle, a fiberglass runabout with a four-cylinder Ford engine and a MercCruiser outdrive. It is the same boat we keep at my parent's lake place.

This boat should be far too heavy to pick up, and yet we easily lower it into the creek. We drive around a bit with the boys, but the ride doesn't last long. We soon hit bottom. Maybe the prop strikes a rock; I am not sure.

Then I am in the garage, lusting over an antique Cadillac.

It is an early 1970s model, complete with original gold paint and customized with a set of longhorns above the grill. I raise the hood. The engine is one of the old V-8s. Been a long time since I've seen one of these babies! I notice that it doesn't have the auxiliary plastic coolant reservoir of more modern appliances. Yes, this is an original. Then I notice something odd: Most of the top of the engine is covered with a sort of cloth saddle. This covering appears to have been constructed of a green Army field coat. The cloth is stained with oil and antifreeze, just as you'd expect to see in an engine compartment. I also notice a lot of custom detailing on the hood. In addition to the longhorns there is some sort of metal-tipped strap, something obviously taken from a saddle.

As I step back from the car, I notice how it is larger than the newer Cadillac it is parked next to. This is definitely a car from another era. I'm not sure of the model, though. It looks a bit like an El Dorado, but with the roof line of a Ford Mustang Mach II. I notice two nameplates on the side. One is Mazarati, which makes me think I remember a time when Cadillac linked up with that maker to put out a special edition Cadillac. (Later, I will remember that it was actually "Chrysler by Mazarati.") The second nameplate is an oval medallion on the side of the roof. It says "Muse," and I understand this refers to the stereo system.

So there it is: A golden, horned animal car with a radio for listening to God. This is an invitation for a journey, what I would soon come to regard as my trip to the Land of the Dead.

Back in the back yard, I notice a party next door. It is perhaps a reunion of people I know, maybe even some I am related to. One of them looks like one of my uncles from Fort Jesup. And there is someone else I know: LeAnn Shedi.

I see her out of the corner of my eye, sitting on the covered patio, reading a book. I have this vague idea that she is in college, still 20 years old. She is a time traveler.

Although it has been years since I last saw her, I decide not to speak. I want her to make the initial contact, a strategy I hope will keep me from looking desperate. (She was the one who ended our relationship.) But, of course, this is ridiculous. College was 20 years ago. I am 40, married with children. She is merely a ghost from the past.

I return to the creek, this time carrying a plastic bucket. I'm not sure what is in it; I think it is some sort of food item. A baked vegetable or bread, maybe. It isn't something common, I know that, but not really strange or exotic, either. Do I eat one? I'm not sure. It seems I may have eaten immediately before going outside.

I sit down on the edge of a drop off, the place where the yard gives way to the creek below. The water is clear. I see pebbles on the bottom. I think of our ride in the motorboat, and my father joins me.

"You really shouldn't drive that boat in the creek," he says. "It's not deep enough."

He leaves, and after a few minutes I return to the house. I take a path which somehow leads across the neighbor's back yard, affording me an up close view of the party. Sure enough, I do know these people. Several of them greet me, clearly expecting me to join them. But I realize I am dirty; I must take a shower before I can join them. So I wave, throw off a quick "hi" in passing and continue to the house. But I do look over the crowd long enough to see that LeAnn isn't there.

I walk around the side of my parent's house, arriving at the open garage door. I speak to someone -- or maybe overhear them speak. They confirm that LeAnn has left the party.

But she is not all that is missing. For in the garage, I discover the antique Cadillac is gone, too.

Where it was parked, I find only pieces of broken red bricks, lint, dust, etc. I recognize this material as bits of the old house -- circa 1905 -- that we demolished to make way for our current home, the one my wife wants to sell. The truth seems clear: LeAnn has left in the car.

Next, my wife comes into the garage and points out with some satisfaction that LeAnn is gone. It seems she is gently chiding me, suggesting that I had been thinking more of LeAnn than I should have. Of course, the suggestion is true. But I feel only vaguely guilty. She should not be jealous of a ghost.

Then LeAnn's older sister joins us. And like LeAnn, she is still in her 20s. She is another time traveler. But she is not the person I recall from 20 years ago. She looks like a movie actress, though I can't quite recall which one.

The sister and my wife talk, and I understand from their conversation that LeAnn is going to Paris -- or maybe it is the sister who is going or just returned. The sister says it in a name-dropper way, an attempt to impress -- not at all like I remember her. It is then that I realize she is not LeAnn's sister at all. And the LeAnn I saw in the backyard was not the real LeAnn or even her ghost. They are my own lovely creations, crafted from memories a half a lifetime old and my own immoral despair.

My creation took away the car, my muse-mobile, my transport to the Land of the Dead. Don't I feel good now?

Why LeAnn? Why did you steal my muse-mobile? So often you ignore me in my dreams. You are kind enough to visit me in my waking life, exiled here on this island for unspecified crimes against humanity. But even here, you are mysterious. You act as if you do not even recognize me. This is an absurd affectation. We attended high school together, nearly penetrated each other's membranes in the back seat of the 1970 Cutlass convertible. And then we met again last year, when your husband was away. Where was it? Perhaps one of the theater-in-the-park productions of Ibsen's "Rosmersholm." No? Then maybe it was while on holiday in Karlstadt or Baden-Salsa. Or even here upon these very sands, on the beaches of the forlorn and tragic island of Marienbad. Didn't you say you would leave your husband and we would run away together? It was only last year. I remember it distinctly. You were wearing 1961 Chanel and feathers, and I fervently wished to expel my ectoplasm inside you. Have I changed so much, then? Or are you pretending not to recognize me? A year already, perhaps more.

You, at least, are still the same. I think of Robbe-Grillet: "The same dreamy eyes, the same smile, the same sudden laugh, the same brusque arm movement, the same way of resting your hand on your shoulder. You still use the same perfume."

Standing on the patio of my last boyhood home in Duncanville. I am talking to a woman -- my secretary or administrative assistant -- about a large number of documents in my possession. They are bundled in white paper, the same dimensions as reams of printer paper. There are dozens of these packages. I reflect that the ability to produce and manage such a volume of material is very American; the Japanese couldn't do it.

Why do I think this? Aren't the Japanese as industrious and hardworking as Americans? I have no satisfying defense.

Lots of me in this patio. I recall a different time, maybe a year earlier. I looked up and saw a clock dial bleeding through the sky, a psychic contrail suspended in the high, thin stratosphere. God's timepiece. But time for what? Strange to be here, so out of time, for my parents sold this house years ago.

Then it comes to me, the “aha!” of clear-eyed recognition: These documents are the transcript of my life, 40 years of streaming text, single-spaced pages, 500 to a bundle. Call it “The Word of Belleró.” With such a transcript, perhaps I don’t need a muse-mobile to reach the Land of the Dead. Words alone may be enough.

In a car, driving with my family through East Texas. It is a stretch of rural, two-lane blacktop, much like the one that runs between Mabank and Canton. So happy, enjoying our little day trip in the country. But I need a restroom, and none are to be found.

Suddenly I fear I have missed the turnoff. And still no restroom! It occurs to me I could relieve myself by the side of the road. But while it is a rural area, there is a lot of traffic, no privacy at all. I hate that.

Then we are on foot.

We find ourselves walking along a smoothly graded roadbed – perfect, like potting soil, not a clump of dirt or a rock to be seen -- shaded by tall trees, the dark piney woods. This is deep East Texas, the Sabine National Forest. I can smell that East Texas scent, that peculiar mix of the humid and fertile with a sharp turpentine bite – clean and fresh, yet unmistakably of the musty Old South. We are on the El Camino Real nearing the Land of the Dead, which lies perhaps 45 minutes away beyond the old steel girder Sabine River bridge (now buried some 30 years under the Toledo Bend Reservoir) and 140 years of Leach history.

It is dark in the deep shade of the piney woods, so dark in fact that as I follow what I think is the roadbed I suddenly realize I have lost my way and am standing in a freshly graded circular driveway. We are in someone’s front yard. It proves to be the first of a group of houses, like a mini village.

Now we are off the path entirely. To continue the journey, we must cross through someone’s fenced yard.

“They can’t blame us,” I hear someone in our party say. Perhaps it is one of my parents, who I think are now somehow with us. For now, it seems that our group numbers perhaps a half dozen.

“It’s the only way to get through to the other side,” someone else allows. “I’m sure the owners are used to it.”

Then we are in the backyard, on a wooden deck, and we can even see the road just beyond the fence. But there is still no access; we realize that we must go through the house to regain the road. No one is home, so we let ourselves inside.

I’m not entirely comfortable with this. It is, after all, breaking and entering. But there is a vague consensus among our party that we are known by or even related to the owners. And since they live in the country, they won’t mind too much if we let ourselves in. Country folk are friendly. It will be OK.

We look around the house a moment, but before we can find the back door some neighbors arrive. They are polite, but understandably a bit suspicious. Rather than talk to us about why we are here, though, they want to know – asking politely, of course – about the “potato pot” that was left on the door on one of their homes. There is a sense that we were the ones who “borrowed” the pot – perhaps from this house – and left it on their door.

Since I still need to relieve myself, I go to the bathroom. But as I begin to urinate into the toilet, water starts backing up and spilling over the top. The water is clear; all that pollutes it are bits of disintegrating toilet tissue. Using a plunger, I try to clear the blockage. Water is gushing forth, almost artesian. The water cannot be contained. It wells up, alive.

Apparently, I did not make it through the house on the road, for I find that I have returned to the starting point. Again, I am at my boyhood home in Duncanville.

I walk to the backyard storage building, a board-and-batten structure my father built with his own hands shortly after my parents bought the place in 1972. I have come to receive my annual review for work. A man leads me to the back side of the building, where he directs me to walk in the narrow gap between it and the stockade fence. I climb over stacks of lumber and other materials. Then he guides me through an even narrower area formed by more construction materials piled between the side of the building and the brick base of the old windmill, a metal, bullet-riddled relic with the brand name “Dandy” on the steering vane. Almost no one else in the world would be thin enough to fit through such a tight space. And yet I succeed and enter the building.

From the outside the building appears to be a small shed, about 10-by-10. But once inside, I see that it is much larger, consisting of a living room in front and a kitchen and second, smaller room in back. We sit in the front room, a hot, jumbled mess still more storage building than house. There is no AC, and the door is left open for circulation. I talk with my boss. He punches numbers into a calculator, which he then hands to me. I understand that he does not wish it to be seen by the man who brought me here, who is also with us. Of course, the amount of my raise is private.

I assume the number I see on the calculator readout represents my new weekly pay. Also, I can see my annual salary. As I looked at the amounts, it does not strike me as a large raise. Perhaps it is even a bit small. For some reason, though, I find that I am unable to do the mental calculations to determine if it is a satisfactory amount. Nevertheless, I conclude that the number is acceptable and signal this to my boss. The review is over.

Now I turn my attention to the kitchen and third room in the back of the building. It occurs to me that I could live in this building, just going into my parent’s house for use of the bathroom. After all, they would not mind. (This is somewhat reminiscent of an idea I had in my childhood, that I could buy a parcel of the vacant land behind my parents’ house and build a cottage there. I would walk to it via a trail through their backyard. I thought it would be a very inexpensive way to have a place of my own.)

As I look around, I see that there are other people in the building – a man and a woman, I think, and they are talking about the lack of a bathroom.

“No,” the man says, “theoretically it would not be acceptable for a woman to live in house without a bathroom. Women would need a real bath. Besides, you can’t put in a fake toilet, because kids would still use it, and that would be a real mess.”

No one has suggested that a fake toilet will be installed. But, apparently wishing to keep the discussion light, the woman does not argue. She simply states that no fake toilet is anticipated.

I explore the rest of the structure. I realize that it is much larger than three rooms; it is a full size house, significantly larger than my parents’ home. There is even an indoor pool. It is a step lower than the rest of the house and is entered through a wide opening. Pool side is decorated with plants and boulders. A young man with his girlfriend brushes past me.

“This isn’t for you,” he says, “only others.”

Is this true? He seems like a bit of a jerk. But I see no reason to push it with him. I don’t want to go for a swim right now anyway; I only wish to finish my tour of the structure.

I notice that the house is floored in blonde maple, like a gymnasium. At the back of the house, the floor is warped downward. The foundation is sinking. This suggests that the structure is not built as solidly as a real house, but I am not particularly concerned. After all, the building sits on concrete blocks, so it can be easily jacked up to its proper, original height.

I enter what appears to be the main living room, complete with a stone or brick fireplace and a barrel vaulted ceiling. Along one wall is a set of built-in book shelves. The front molding stops at the height of the wall, which means the shelves don’t reach the ceiling. It occurs to me that the room possesses the sort of comfortable, lived-in look that I prefer. It is by no means fancy, yet precisely what I like.

In a furniture or appliance store, where I am responsible for a number of children. Some of them are not well behaved, and the store officials want me to exercise control. I am unsuccessful. I fear we may be asked to leave.

Next, I am in a car – alone or with a companion, perhaps my wife – driving through a neighborhood of custom, one-of-a-kind homes. The sun is out, but it is obviously winter because there are patches of snow or white ice on some of the roofs. The sunlight is thawing this white, which flows off a high stretch of roof in the manner of a mountain waterfall.

A few blocks later, an unusual house catches my eye. It looks like a tower supporting a saucer-like structure, a miniature version of the Tower of the Americas in San Antonio. The shaft of the tower is made of glass and contains a spiral staircase. Doesn't look much like a house. In fact, at first glance I think it is part of a playground.

Then I spot an even more dramatic example of the UFO style. No tower, but a much larger "saucer," which is surrounded by a porch. I am with a companion, and we wish to have a closer look at this house, which is clearly a significant piece of architecture. Someone is in front of us, pushing a cart or baby stroller; they too are trying to get a closer look. It is twilight, and the lights are already on inside the house, intensifying the UFO effect.

The people in front of us walk onto the porch – its ceiling dimly lit by flush-mounted light panels – and look inside a window. The residents are inside eating dinner, and they are understandably unhappy about this intrusion. I cannot hear what they say, but the meaning is clear. They send the intruders away. So we leave, too, without looking inside or even seeing anything else of the outside of the house. Like the indoor pool of my undiscovered house, this place is not for me.

And the journey through prohibited places continues.

My wife and I are in a strange place, an alien society. We are fleeing from unseen people in a seemingly abandoned structure, maybe a stadium. The design is somewhat reminiscent of the UFO house, but on a much larger and grander scale.

We spot a place almost out of sight, near the base, where you can see the underlying construction. My wife comments that we can see the steel support beams. As we look for a hiding place, we find a marble alcove reminiscent of ancient Roman architecture. It is perhaps the size of a bedroom. This alcove is out of sight, but I immediately realize that if we are found here there will be no escape. We will be trapped. So we go in search of a more secure place of safety.

It is then that we realize there are people everywhere, hurrying about in search of their own hiding places. It is growing dark, suggesting to me that the time to get out of sight is almost here. I realize that we are not well suited for this. I am wearing only white boxers and my wife is in little more than shorts and a top. Where to go? I see a young black man, very dark. He is shirtless. I instantly fear him – and all of the obviously desperate people around us. This man will rape my wife, or someone else will. Where to go?

I see a flight of steps leading to a lower level. The black man waves his hand, showing us the way down the steps. Like an usher.

"I will take you to a place of safety," he says.

I do not trust him, so I grab my wife's hand and we bolt through a doorway to the outside.

We find ourselves standing under a loggia, looking out on a plaza that reminds me of the main square in New Orleans' French Quarter. Many people are relaxing in small groups. All of them are young and beautiful, the elite of this society. They are obviously of a higher social cast than the underground people who are scrambling for shelter before nightfall.

They are dressed for leisure, though in a way I have never seen. On bared stomachs, each person displays a large, painted eye. It is the Eye of Horus, the ancient Egyptian symbol used to ward off sickness and bring the dead back to life. The latter must be the case here, for the eye was also used as an amulet over the embalmer's incision. That's how you made a suitable mummy.

The Eye of Horus is a particularly fitting image for this point in the journey, for it was only the day before – in the waking world – that I was reading the Old Testament story of Joseph's dream and his resulting enslavement in Egypt. This was his destiny.

These Third Eye people look us over, instantly judging us to be the inferior, underground people. We do not belong; they fear us. Not waiting for them to act on this judgment, we run toward the street at the end of the loggia. This creates some excitement. I kick someone in their abdominal eye, and my wife – now inexplicably holding a baby in her arms – breaks into a run. Another of the Third Eye people produces a large plastic lens (square, perhaps 15 to 20 inches per side) and places it in front of my stomach. Apparently, this action is intended to draw attention to the fact that my abdomen does not possess the required cyclopean makeup. I am blind.

I try to follow my wife, but the path is barred by a man. He is a sort of henchman for the man in charge, who I somehow know. I try to fight him. Someone hands me the blade of a plastic toy sword, and the man in charge laughs. Someone else hands me the handle, and I hastily assemble the two pieces. Even though it is a toy, I realize that it is a real sword. It can injure, even kill.

With this weapon, I lunge at the man in charge. But I miss, and he disarms me. He thrusts the sword deep into my pelvis. As he withdraws the weapon, there is a thought in my head (or maybe the man is speaking it) that the sword is stuck inside me. This is the wound of the Fisher King.

If he pulls hard enough, then I will be lifted off the ground. For some reason I decide it is best to fake this. I lift my buttocks a few inches off the ground. Even so, the pain is real. But I understand that I will recover from this wound. I will heal and live to fight again.

In a high school gymnasium, waiting at the front of a line to play basketball or maybe just shoot hoops. I am talking to the coach, enjoying a pleasant, fun conversation. I think to myself that this is a big change from when I was in high school. I would have felt too inadequate – not enough of a regular guy, not athletic enough – to have talked to him so comfortably. My wife is with me. We are supposed to come back later for a lengthy practice session, several hours.

Next, my wife and I are walking down a path or road. I am reading at the same time. The book is about a famous man who had some important revelations under the influence of some concoction that contained mercury. I don't remember much about the subject or the wording. I think it was philosophical or psychological in nature. And I remember reading the word "bellicose." Perhaps this concoction made him mercurial.

After the walk, we return to our hotel room or maybe a rented house. My wife is lying on the sofa, asleep. I am sitting in a chair, still reading. Next door is a Hispanic woman (a domestic laborer), and she cries out in terror. It is somewhat frightening, almost as if the woman is the danger – or might endanger us. My wife wakes up, either right before the woman shouts or because of it. We wonder what is wrong. I look out the window, but see nothing.

The window to danger also appears inside a second floor apartment. This is my home. My wife is here, but no kids. Do we have children? I don't know.

My wife is taking a shower in the master bedroom, and I am in another bedroom or perhaps a secondary living room. I look out the window and see a man in a monster suit, standing on the balcony. He is facing me, waving his arms and making threatening motions. The costume is gray fabric, head to toe. He looks like a giant Muppet. It would be laughable, except for the scary face and fang-like teeth. This is no joke.

A frantic neighbor comes to the door, asking to come inside. I let her in. She is scared because she also saw someone at her window -- an ex-husband or boyfriend. She is wearing pajamas, so I offer to let her stay in the guest bedroom, for privacy.

"No, I'm too scared to be alone," she says.

"OK, as soon as my wife is out of the shower I will get you a robe."

I look out another window and see two men on the ground. They appear to be maintenance workers, but I wonder if it is a disguise. Perhaps they are in league with the Muppet monster.

In the living room, I now find several visitors. Among them is someone who has brought two molded plastic action figures. One has a face with gills, like the "Creature from the Black Lagoon." The other figure is of a normal human. We ask the pajama-wearing neighbor if either of the figures look like the man she fears. She says no.

I sit on the sofa, reading the album cover of a Bing Crosby record. The back has a story about the five things that made Bing an ideal man. He was attractive to women; a success as a husband; a success as a father; etc. I flip over the album cover. It is a little worn around the edges, but still in good shape. The front has a chalk or pastel drawing of Bing. The album is titled "Silver Jesus."

The maintenance men come to the door. They are legitimate, so I let them inside. One of the men is there to work on the air conditioning, the other to paint. I look at one of the living room walls, and I see why they need to be painted. Someone has painted words here – not ragged like graffiti, but perfectly formed. It's almost like a machine had done it. There are two rows of words, maybe four, and one or two words per row. They are written on the vertical, from bottom to top. To read them, you must turn your head sideways. I do not recall any of the words. I believe my wife painted them there. Again, I'm not sure. At least I know I did not. It is OK, though, because we knew in advance that the walls were going to be painted.

Someone suggests that one of the toy figures looks like one of the maintenance men. But another person disagrees, pointing out that the figures don't look real. The facial details are too detailed, too perfect. Then comes the inevitable question: Are the maintenance men really who they say they are? One of the men is right there and can hear everything. What must he think?

"Of course he's real," I say. "He has his own action figure."

The tension is broken; the man smiles at my joke.

My education continues. I am at a school competition. Martin Horshall and I are asked a multiple choice question by Mrs. Danvenlar, one of our teachers at Duncanville High School. Whoever answers correctly goes on to the next, higher level of competition. We can see this question on a piece of paper, yet she is asking it out loud. Stranger still, I think that I must listen carefully or I will miss it. Perhaps I am merely nervous.

The question is something about two writers – I think one or both are women -- and what work they produced together. I don't know the answer, but I see that Martin has raised his hand. But is he raising it for answer B or C? Then he answers. In turn, I listen to all the answers, then pick the one I think Martin has selected. How can I go wrong? But somehow I misunderstand his answer. I miss the question. I am out of the competition.

Mrs. Danvenlar then says Martin can stay for the rest of the competition, but there's no reason. He is advancing to a competition that will take place on another day.

"It's fine to just go home," she says.

I walk out of the building, which at first appears to be a school facility. But then it seems to become a house, then the school again. I am following the front walk from door to parking lot. A boy comes up beside me. I put my hand on his head, and we talk. I know him. I hope that I am not responsible for driving him home, though. I hope that he will get in someone else's car and not try to come with me. And, in fact, I leave alone.

As I am driving away, turning through a neighborhood and onto a thoroughfare, I think about Duncanville. I had always wanted to come back after college. Even now, it's still an option. I could buy an affordable house. So many of the town's old houses are just what I want, and they go for $60,000 to $90,000 – quite a bit cheaper than in Strangers Rest.

Then I am on Interstate 20, traveling westbound toward Duncanville. Redbird Mall is coming up on the right. A car cuts in front of me, so I tailgate, a classic passive-aggressive maneuver. This car is driven by a young blonde woman who looks just like someone from my work.. It's uncanny; she could be her sister. The woman has two teenage girls with her; they are blonde, too. An attractive trio. The woman is speaking to me, shouting over the road wind. Apparently she believes my tailgating constitutes some form of flirting. Then she is gone.

I see the mall on the right and think that I am glad it is not my destination. It has become rather run down in recent years, not at all like it was when I was in high school 20 years before.

I am not going there. But then I am there.

I park and walk down a paved slope that ends at what appears to be an underground parking area. It is really more like a cave. Or a tomb. I am about to walk inside, but stop myself. I hear voices; a rambunctious party is going on. But it is so dark all I see is black. It occurs to me that if I go into this blackness, the voices – the people inside – will tear me apart. So I turn around and walk back up the slope. There are people coming and going around me. I am now carrying a weed wacker, slung over my shoulder like a burden. I see the blonde trio approaching. I think to myself that the weed wacker is really like a cross. So I walk slowly back up the hill, Christ walking to his crucifixion. This is an intentional affectation, an attempt to appear not quite so cowardly about the cave. I pass the woman and two girls without speaking.

At the top of the slope I enter a gift shop. The merchandise includes a doll that looks like one of the spelunker characters from the old cave ride at Six Flags Over Texas. I walk outside, thinking about how they could construct the walkway so that one could only travel forward. This construction would ensure that you'd get lost if you tried to go back. A special, one-way door might do the trick. There would be no going back.

Now I am inside another building, sort of like the lobby area of a hotel meeting room or a wide concourse in an airport. A movie is to be shown in the meeting room. I am talking to someone about how this reminds me of watching movies at high school assemblies.

"I see that they have an efficient, computerized method of logging everyone in," I say. "They know how to quickly collect the money and get people inside. Times have certainly changed."

"That's the way they did it when I was in school," he replies. "How about you?"

"It was all done by hand, in cash."

I think to myself it must have taken more time than I remember. We must have wasted a lot of time on those school movies.

Meanwhile, I see that the concourse contains tables filled with art. Also, there are paintings on the walls. Everything is for sale.

A man with a neatly trimmed gray beard and plaid flannel shirt (the retired preacher from Trinity Baptist?) walks up to look at the art, too. Then I hear one of the paintings speak to him.

It is a sort of mumble; I can't make out the words. Shocked, I step back and look at the painting. I see the images are changing. In one, someone's eyes burn red.

"Is this real?" I ask the man.

"Yes. The painting did speak."

So it is a demon painting. I approach, determined to hold the evil one accountable.

"In the name of God I command you to speak."

I see a creature in the painting, and it suddenly escapes from the canvas and becomes a sculpture on the table below. It is a horned goat, about the size of a small dog. Again I address the demon.

"Are you Beelzebub? In the name of God I command you to speak."

I mean to speak normally, but my words come out in a growling voice, like the one used for demons in the movies. This evil-sounding voice is the only way I can even get a sound out of my mouth. I speak in the voice of the devil.

Then the statue comes to life and looks around the table where it stands.

"Who are you?" it asks.

I am frightened, but answer with certainty.

"I am Belleró, a child of God and son of Christ."

The creature hops down onto the floor, where it stands beside a table leg. All I can think now is I want this demon back inside the art. It is too frightening to have it running about, free and uncontrolled.

"In the name of God, I command you to return to the painting."

But the demon does not obey. It just stands there, unconcerned. I sense that it must eventually obey me, but I will have to be insistent. I must not give up.

Traveling with Kit Genelli, an old friend who I have not seen or spoken to in several years. We are in a place that looks something like the East Texas town of Nacogdoches (one of the milestones on the road to the Land of the Dead), featuring a main street along the edge of the university campus. It is a downtown area, but not at all like the one in Nacogdoches (or anywhere else in East Texas). Really, it is a sort of European market. The shops are on the left side of the street, and the campus is on the right.

On the school side, there is an old bus or street car – clearly British – and it can be toured for an admission. The fee is posted on an antique looking British sign. Even the price is British; it is stated in pounds. I mentally estimate the conversion to dollars; the price is too high.

Kit and I are on the other side of the street, walking through the market. Kit was always quite an Anglophile, and indeed the shops and products seem to resemble those I remember from England. One merchant has some ornate silver knobs. They are $200 each, but I immediately recognize this is a rip off. They are not solid silver or even antique. They are worth a fraction of the asking price. I think to myself that even if the seller said "half off" it would still be a rip off.

A man embraces a second man, against his will. The embrace transforms the second man into a beautiful woman, who then willingly kisses the man. This is a troubling image, the transformation of man into woman. It is demonic.

Outside a brownstone with my wife and our boys. I see an antique desk we have been storing in our barn, its hinged top open. Inside, I find sliced baked goods – bread or perhaps a cake with a crust. But it is not appetizing, for it is covered in bugs. And it has been poisoned to kill the bugs. This is bad, for our dogs have eaten it; they are sick. Rosy, our new black Lab puppy, is lying on her side. Flies buzz around her, congregating on her head and nose. She looks dead. We must find a vet.

We ask a passerby, but they are unable to help. But we think there is a vet clinic in the office complex next door. So I take off on foot to find it. This is an important quest. I feel that if I fail I will be blamed for Rosy's death. The burden is heavy.

I go inside the building. People are lined up in front of an antique store or second hand shop. Apparently, there is a going out of business or inventory reduction sale. Unable to find the clinic, I return to Rosy and my family. It is growing dark, and they are all gone. I am a lonely failure.

I go to a place of business, sit in a waiting room. I possess a can of lighter fluid, a small one of the type used to fill cigarette lighters. But it does not contain lighter fluid; rather, it is some sort of liquid candy. I think that I would like to taste some of it, but there are others around me so it would be rude.

Traveling in a Jeep. It is somewhat larger than the normal model. The front passenger seat is mounted sideways and is perhaps three feet from and faces the driver's seat, which is on the right. The driver is Davy Allis, a co-worker. I am one of two passengers. I don't know the other man, though I assume he is from work, too.

We are engaged in a sort of race or competition, negotiating the highest lane of a big highway cloverleaf. We are so high that I feel as if I might fly out of my seat. Hang on tight! We descend from the cloverleaf and reach the finish line. But we have lost. It seems that a team of women from work have won -- or at least finished before us. We continue, though, presumably to return to work. Davy is disappointed.

"I thought when I signed the check to lease this car for the race, I would get a great rush from it," he says. "But I didn't."

Rather than going back to the office, we stop at a sort of a rural retreat. We walk through a set of swinging doors, but we remain outside. We follow a walkway, which is partially covered and enclosed by partitions for various stalls. So there is a feeling of being in a sort of corridor, recalling my New York City trip.

The first stall on the right houses a tent revival, a religious education class for children and teenagers. I sense this is a closed group, almost a sect. But the tent flaps are open enough that you can see inside and, of course, you can hear the speaker through the fabric.

I am not aware of the words, only the tone, which is like a teacher -- droning, boring, nothing that you'd want to listen to even if it were a valuable secret. Davy and the other man then produce an old tan case, such as might hold a portable typewriter. They set it on the ground at the back of the tent, then start walking very fast for the swinging doors. They hit the doors and bolt.

I now understand that this case is going to explode. No one will be injured, though perhaps some minor property damage will occur. I walk quickly after the two men, taking care not to run. I don't want to draw attention to myself. And yet I realize that if I don't escape quickly I will be implicated in the impending blast.

Once again, my wife and I are in a classroom at Duncanville High School. It is one hour before we are to take the semester final exam. I think it is a science course, because the room walls are sea green tile, like you might see in a 1950s hospital or laboratory.

An hour is plenty of time to study the textbook and be ready for the test. My wife has her book, but I do not. So I start looking for it. At first, I think it must be in my locker. But I never use my locker, and I can't remember where it is. I continue looking, without success. And even if I find it, I realize it is probably locked. I can't remember any combinations.

After a bit, I decide to drive home and see if the book is there. Time is running short. The test will begin in 30 or 40 minutes, so I must hurry. But there isn't enough time. Before reaching home, I turn around and driving back to the school. I will get there in time for the test, but this is cold comfort. I will not be prepared. My only hope is that I will know enough to pass the test anyway.

Apparently I make a wrong turn, though, because I end up at Six Flags Over Texas. It is not the modern one, but some abandoned, original portion of the park (circa 1960s). Of course, this is odd; the feel of the place is exactly the way it used to be. My childhood memories come flooding back. Somehow I am in the park, driving on a concrete track that used to be part of a ride that closed years -- decades -- ago. Maybe it's the old Mexican train ride, the one that went through a volcano that was always on the verge of eruption. I always liked that one. These are the ruins of the wonderland that was Six Flags.

I recall how as a boy at the park I could see appliances passing on the highway outside the fence. And I remember how I used to think about the people in those passing appliances, how sad that they were in the plain, boring world. How sad I used to feel the other 364 days of the year, when we were in one of the appliances passing through the plain, boring world.

On a family vacation, staying in a condo. Our unit features a railed-in porch a few feet off the ground. Inside, my wife and I talk about the broken riding lawnmower that comes with the place. We are not going to fix it, of course, but it is annoying. On top of this, the toilet is stopped up. My wife is talking to a man about our need to receive some license, which is the reason we are there. She asks if we could still get the license if we use a bathroom elsewhere. Somehow, I think a stool sample is required to get this license, so the toilet is an important issue.

The man says no.

“The whole point is you must do it here,” he says.

So rather than wait for the landlord, who we know must not be big on maintenance because of the lawnmower situation, I decide to repair the toilet myself.

It is in the middle of the living room and consists of some flexible plastic bladder, perhaps three feet in diameter. I clean it out with a garden hose that has been equipped with a spray nozzle. As a cleaning agent, I use chicken soup.

Later, we are away from the condo, and I am cleaning the bladder outside. My wife is talking to someone, perhaps the same man about the license. As I run water through the bladder, I see that I am flushing out sand along with the chicken soup. Perhaps tree roots had penetrated the sewer line, admitting the sand.

Soon the water begins to flush clear, and I realize the bladder is unclogged. It is ready for re-installation.

Now competing in a foot race. The event consists of several legs, including one in which the runners wear a backpack. We are at a park, and I am standing next to a door-like gate in a tall, cyclone fence. The other competitors appear to include parents from my son’s soccer team. My wife is here, too. We follow the race course into an indoor section, which is my office. I find co-workers are busy preparing to make our department – corporate communications – a part of HR.

That night at home someone rings the doorbell. It is so late that I am leery of opening the door, so I shout for them to tell me who they are. I hear a voice, but it is muffled. I can’t understand them. I turn on the porch light and look through the peephole, but I can’t see anything. It’s dark, and the peephole is hard to see through even in daylight.

So I go into my son’s bedroom and look out the window. I see a man in a gray T-shirt, scattering trash from a plastic garbage bag he carries on his shoulder. I am afraid. Terrified. Surely, this man poses a danger far worse than that of a mere litterbug. But what should I do? I could call 9-11, but I realize it will be hard to convey my sense of fear, to explain how a man scattering trash in my front yard could possibly be a matter for the police.

Back at work, with my wife and others. We are in an open office area, where the departmental merger continues. There are several desks and other pieces of office furniture scattered about, but the whole area seem to have recently fallen into disuse. During the merger, it has been consigned to temporary storage.

I am looking at items on a shelf. They have our old company name, including a sign that is a cutout of the company logo. I realize these are obsolete materials from before the corporate name change.

I walk to another room and I find myself in what appears to be my great-grandmother’s house in Waco. The house doesn’t look quite right, though it is hard to say why. I haven’t been there in more than a quarter century. She died when I was in high school.

Still, the inside of the house looks unchanged. Outside is a different story. Through the back window I see a freight train traveling through the backyard. The old neighborhood is now an industrial district, and pieces of the lot have been sliced off for railroad right-of-way and other commercial uses.

I see an altar. It consists of steps forming the four sides of a pyramid, perhaps 20 feet along the base on each side. I do not see the top. A lion walks up several steps and lies down, exhausted.

The altar dream came a few days before September 11. Coincidence? Not. We must not forget the vast government/alien conspiracy that eliminates all coincidence. Nothing is left to chance.

If we are to understand September 11 and other apocalyptic events, then we must see them as intentional manifestations of both inner and outer reality. We do not have to be like the lion of America, overcome or possessed. We must be like the lion of nature, awesome and eternal. This sort of lion is humanized by being understood. The Earth is coming under the control of this animalistic force. In such a state of planetary affairs, nothing is more important than the existence of what Jungian analyst Edward Edinger called a “creative minority,” a certain number of individuals who know how to fold the present into the past. The creative minority understands what is going on. And because they understand, they can ask the important, otherworldly questions:

Why is this happening?

Who is responsible?

What does it all mean?

In “Archetype of the Apocalypse,” Edinger states that these otherworldly inquiries assume escalating importance the more distressed our earthly conditions become. We encounter these issues not in a spiritual way, but through the various reversion phenomena we are even now experiencing on a planetary scale. We see the ascendancy of fundamentalism, the decay of our multifaceted communal edifices and regression to more primordial community agreements. We see vast communal shadow projections resulting in sectarian violence and wars of many types at many echelons of the social order and through the pervasive gloom that leads to sacrament abuse and other compulsions. The result is a supernatural contamination infecting even those who might typically be expected to have the understanding and creativity to devise and execute suitable counter measures. This is why I put so much hope in the creative minority. If our numbers are appropriately large, then we might begin to entertain one of the primary ideas at the heart of “Next Year at Marienbad.” That is, the Earth is primed to experience a transformation of the Deity (i.e., a sacrificial event of the people for the people). This is the correct time for a metamorphosis of the Deity AND OF HUMANKIND.

Edinger writes: “The peculiarity of our time, which is certainly not of our conscious choosing, is the expression of the unconscious man within us who is changing.”

The shadow is becoming flesh.

I live in a dormitory. It is three floors. The building appears to be about the same age as the dorms where I lived in college, but much larger. There is even a gift shop. As I browse, I see something with the Hot Wheels brand – a strange sight in a store aimed at college students.

Then I am in a room with others from work. The room belongs to Lee Stakhanov from work. He is busy and shows us the papers he has affixed to the wall, a technique I use often, too.

My wife and I are listening to my parents talk about starting a business. They think our area needs a car rental franchise. My wife agrees that it is a good idea. She reports that there is only one rental car business in the area, and it is not easy to find. It seems incredible to me that the immediate area around D/FW Airport would be so in need of a car rental business. What an untapped market!

Then my wife and I get in the back seat of my parent's car. Actually, the car is my wife's old red Honda CRX, a two-seater she drove before we had children. But now it has a back seat, which is split into two seats. My wife sits on the passenger side; here seat is fixed in place. I sit on the driver side in a seat that can slide back and forth. I can slide it, but I am unable to make lock into place. The mechanism is broken.

As we drive along, I see a large body of water on the passenger side of the car. A very large lake or bay or perhaps even an ocean. Then we are crossing a small finger of this water, but we are not on a bridge. We are driving ON the water. Then we are back on dry land, unaffected by this contradiction of basic physics. This is particularly noteworthy for it was the previous weekend that a ship struck the bridge from Corpus Christi (a.k.a. the Body of Christ) to Padre Island, causing a section of the roadway to collapse into the causeway.

I have been granted use of the home of the Brysons (that is, the home of Jack's parents). They are out of town, so I am staying here until their return. A house sitter. And perhaps I'll be having a party, too? I am not sure. I go outside. It is night. The backyard opens onto a field, which looks suspiciously like the field behind a relative's home in Waco. Someone is there, I know it. Do I see them? I'm not sure.

I go back inside, close the door for safety. But I am not alone. Partygoers have arrived. I suppose I am having a party after all. But in addition to the partygoers, I see someone who knows the Brysons; they believe they are to care for the house, not me. So they see me as a trespasser. They are suspicious, but have not decided what they will do about me.

I am with my parents and some children from church or the Cub Scouts. We are all outside of a house. It is a unique structure, made of stone and consisting of various outside corridors. We are on a patio, and three of the kids kick a soccer ball –from one child to a second, then from the second to a third. The ball bounces against the wall in one of the corridors. We follow this corridor to another, which is more enclosed. It is still outside, but under roof and enclosed on the sides by two walls of the building. Brenda Breene (from church and Cub Scouts) is there and others, too. This place has an old-fashioned soft drink machine, the sort with the bottles that are accessed by opening a tall, skinny door.

"I am so happy," I announce to the group as I pull a bottled drink from the mechanism. "This is the first time I have performed this operation since I was a boy."

Great nostalgia. I step up on a chair or bench to look at some sign or decoration that hangs above one of the doorways. I am not sure what it is or if it possesses any particular significance. If only I could make out the words.

At my work in the office of a newspaper. (I have apparently regressed to my newspaper career.) There is a wall mounted TV, a glassed in office, time zone clocks on the wall. By the window there is a twin bed, which is used like a sofa. I am lounging on it with another journalist. We discuss work, a pleasant, funny talk. Then I leave the office, wearing shorts and no shirt and sitting in one of the wheeled desk chairs. There is a circular sidewalk that goes through several courtyard-like areas, separated by walls. I am rolling along past people, just coasting through the quadrants without actually touching my feet or hands to anything.

I've been out of the newspaper business for years, but I still dream about them a lot. I suppose it is because I now work on the other side of the equation, as a spin doctor at Valuosity Life Planning Inc.

Back in the day the only way to live forever required eating the body and drinking the blood of the Son of the Deity. A few people tried consuming mysticism and other illicit sacraments. But that didn't work either.

Then came EternalLife™ from Valuosity. With this product, we no longer had any need for a deity who granted life extension powers. But you already know about that.

Lying in bed with a woman. There is no undue guilt, so presumably I am not married.

She is nude, lying on her stomach. She looks to be in her early 20s. I kiss her back, which is dark tan. Then I leave.

As I walk out of her apartment building, I think about her desire that we have a child together. But I realize that since we are not married it would be her child. I would be sad because I would not be a part of the child's life.

Now I am on the street in front of her apartment. Oddly, this is the street in front of my work. The apartment building is really my office. I begin walking north along the curb on the east side of the street. There are bushes projecting into the street, forcing me to walk around them into the street itself. There is someone else who is doing the same and a third man who is helping him in some way. Perhaps this helper man is a city street worker.

I find a hammer in the street. I pick it up and lightly pound it in my left palm, like you might see a baseball player idly play with a bat. I have already reached the signal light that is north of the library and I have turned around and am heading back toward my office. But now I realize it is not my work at all. This is the old sanctuary of First United Methodist Church in Duncanville, and the street is Avenue C. I go inside, but it is not the church anymore. It is a multi-use building that contains a restaurant, like one in a hotel.

I suddenly have a revelation: I am in a dream! That makes this a lucid dream, something I haven't experienced in years. There is a woman standing in front of me a step to the right, within arm's reach. She is attractive, but I decide I will not act on base desire. Instead, I walk past her, placing a hand on her arm as I pass. I tell myself that this is my dream so I should let myself touch and experience it, control it – but not let my passions control me. I approach the pulpit, which is now the hostess station. The hostess is friendly and attractive. I remind myself that I am not going to engage in sex, but I am so attracted to her that I take her face in my hands and kiss her. She is very receptive. Lucidity is slipping away, back into the primordial night.

I notice a kitchen sink behind her. She steps aside and I stand at the sink. Do I wash my hands? I am not sure. I look at the back on the sink, and along the back splash I spot an old pair of shoes. They are a pair of loafers I owned in college. I have not worn them in years because they needed work; the heels are worn down to the nails. But as I look at the shoes I realize that the heels have been repaired. The shoes are still old, but have been given a new life.

I see an abstract painting. The colors are white and electric blue. There are small blobs of paint on or touching a larger blob. One of the small blobs bursts into flame and disappears in a puff of smoke. The same thing happens with another couple of blobs. Then there is more smoke and one large blob (or maybe several) flare simultaneously. The smoke clears, and in place of the painting there is a floating, golden crown. It looks like a photograph in Eerdman's Handbook to the Bible, a crown that was given to the winners of athletic events in biblical times. I had been looking at the picture that very afternoon.

I am in an antiques store with several people, including Ken Frankins from my newspaper days and my youngest son. I walk past a woman who is walking the other way. I note that she gives me a passing, sidelong glance. I realize that she is looking at me not out of sexual interest but surprise; I am not wearing a shirt. Stranger still, it is winter.

We are in one of the smaller rooms, one room away from the front door. We talk about time traveling to ancient Rome. Ken has been there before. He says that since there are no modern, private bathrooms, you have to wash in one of the Roman baths. I comment that this is time consuming because the Roman baths were about rituals and the experience.

"I can do everything I want in 15 minutes," I say.

So we count our money, making sure we have enough for the baths. I believe there are three or maybe four of us who will be going. I look at my handful of coins. There are also several of my sons' Lego pieces mixed in. The coins are American, all denominations from pennies to quarters. It occurs to me that modern coins will be useless in ancient Rome, but I continue to count and tell myself that somehow the money will be accepted. The total comes to less than two dollars.

Although I don't know what an ancient Roman bath costs, I realize there won't be enough money for all of us. I'll have to go alone. I give no real consideration to telling the others they won't be going. I don't even wonder if I am in a position to say they won't go. This matter is unexplored and unresolved. I only know I will be going.

Then it is time to leave the store. I walk toward the door. It is cold outside. This is when I realize I don't have a shirt or my coat. I get my son to help me look. He finds my coat but not my shirt.

"But I need both," I say. "In fact, I need the shirt even more than the coat."

Then we find it under something else. It is a plaid flannel shirt, the same one I bought when I was 16 on a canoe trip in Ontario, Canada.

Roman architecture plays a recurring role in my dreams, including those I experienced in the creation of "The Shadow Made Flesh." Years later, I discovered the SF writer Philip K. Dick and learned about his hypothesis (fueled by amphetamine abuse) that history had come to a screeching halt in the first century B.C. In the 1970s he believed that the Roman Empire was still in existence. It was the zenith of greed and tyranny. With the rise of Christianity, the Empire forced the Gnostics into the catacombs and kept the rest of humanity enslaved to worldly possessions. Dick believed he was called to bring about the impeachment of Richard Nixon, the Emperor of Rome. He didn't know about Nixon in Texas.

"The Shadow Made Flesh" continues.

In the sanctuary of First United Methodist Church in Duncanville. I am standing in the aisle, near the front, with a group of perhaps a half dozen people, women and men. We begin to walk toward the back, to take our seats. It is almost time for the service to begin.

I wish to sit next to one of the women (because I know her better than the others), but another woman slides up next to her and strikes up a conversation. As we come to our seats it becomes clear to me that I won't be sitting next to anyone with whom I have more than a passing knowledge. So I decide to hide out. Feigning illness, I head for the foyer.

As I walk past the cry room I see that it has been turned into an office – no, a bookkeeping operation. Two older women are working at paper-stewn desks. These are the moneychangers in the temple.

I reach the foyer and sit down on a bench outside the men's room. An usher approaches to offer aid, but I tell him I'll be fine. I escape to the men's room.

I go into a stall but stop and check to make sure there are urinals, just in case I entered the women's restroom by mistake. Sure enough, I am in the right place.

I take off all or most of my clothes. I leave some of them outside of my stall. This is an unsatisfying process, though, so I dress again and leave.

Back in the sanctuary, the service is already in progress. I sit on a chair railing that runs along the back wall. I am joined there by a woman who possesses some sort of parachute toy, like a model rocket. She is talking to me about it. I don't like her manner; she is rather bossy and not paying attention to the service. Then the preacher sees me. He is a white-haired man with a short beard, standing in the aisle near the back. He asks if I am all right.

"Yes."

"That's good."

He continues with his sermon.

It appears that my wife's house hunting activities have finally borne fruit, for I find that we have purchased a new home.

I study a room that I understand was a holy place for the former owner, a Jewish man of some local importance. There is an exposed wooden beam overhead. It is clear from several rough, unpainted patches that decorative pieces have been removed, leaving a piece of raw, unadorned lumber.

I am talking loudly to someone about the house, but then we realize that the family of the former owner is outside the open window and can hear our conversation. The former owner recently died. I look out the window and see a billboard that has something to do with this man. Perhaps he was a businessman.

Meanwhile, I remember that I own a Ford Model A. I had forgotten about it and haven't driven it in a long time. What a thing to forget! So at once I decide to start it up, drive it again. It is a fun vehicle, and this will be like getting something new for free. It has really been that long.

I go to look in the garage, wondering how I could have been blind to its presence all this time. But it is not there. The garage is now furnished as our bedroom. Then I remember that the car is still in the detached garage at my parent's former house in Duncanville.

Although my parents sold this house years ago, I arrive to find a family gathering in progress. The car is still the garage, parked backwards just as I remember it.

To get into the car, I must go through a contortionist's route, squeezing past the floor-mounted gearshift and even unhooking a black radiator hose that comes up through the floor into the passenger compartment. Once I get to the seat, though, my dad steps in with no trouble and sits at the wheel.

He drives us out of the garage and idles in the driveway. The car is a convertible and the top is down, so we have a big view of the world. He looks at the dashboard and taps at a small, three-digit gauge.

"I've been working on this, but I'm still not getting cool air out of any of the cylinders," he says.

I assume he is referring to air conditioning, and I am amazed to hear that such an old car even has AC. But I think again of the radiator hose, and I seem to know there is not enough water. Perhaps the gauge refers to the engine coolant system, not the AC. At any rate, dad says this is not a problem.

"For some reason, the car just doesn't hold water" he explains.

But the car is running, so we take off. We come to a traffic light at a rural highway. As we wait for the light to change, dad comments that the car is running "cool and dry." He has tried to fix it, even looked up some information in a repair manual. But he hasn't been able to change it.

Cool and dry. Later, I will realize that "cool and dry" corresponds to the ancient Greek description of the black bile humor called melancholy. Of course. I am the car.

The light turns green and we start up, but a car is coming toward us in our lane. I let out a shout of alarm, but dad is not concerned. He maintains his course, and the other car gets out of our way.

We cross the highway, which looks a lot like the old intersection of Texas 114 and Oak Street in Strangers Rest, before the highway was modernized. This is Bonnie and Clyde country, just a few miles west of the spot on Texas 114 where they killed a highway patrolman on Easter Sunday 1933.

I realize that the car has now become an old pickup, vintage 1950s, reminiscent of one my father restored when I was a boy. That was a magical car; the moon followed you wherever you went.

This truck is not magical or restored. It is old with faded, rust-stained paint. A new truck pulls up beside us. It is filled with teenage boys.

"The sheriff won't be around tonight," one of them tells us, "so everyone is looking forward to a fun night!"

It is a Saturday. Dad laughs.

"This is sure to be a lively evening," he says.

We soon come to a stop, and we are in the piney woods in Louisiana. It is Fort Jesup, and we are at the home of an uncle who lives near the old Leach homestead. Several people are busy, burning pine needles and brush. There are piles of logs. I don't see my uncle's trailer in what I know is its usual place. Apparently, it has been moved.

While the brush burners work, we sit on the opposite side of the road and visit with family, including my wife and our boys. Several children are carrying long sticks, poking at things as kids like to do. This worries me; someone will be hurt. My youngest son is carrying a very long stick, maybe 8 or 10 feet. This stick branches at the end into a V – sort of a two-pronged pitchfork

"Put that down," I tell him. "You'll poke somebody's eyes out."

And in fact, the two tips of the V are the proper distance apart for such an accident to occur. My mother is with us, too, and she suddenly jerks to life.

"Bellerio, I think I hear someone stealing your car!"

But when I look up I see that it is only a group of passers by -- soldiers by the looks of them. And time travelers. This is not so strange. During World War II, thousands of soldiers engaged in training maneuvers in the area.

So I laugh at her. Then we roll around on the ground together, wrestling as if I am still her little boy. This is totally out of character for us. Strangely, though, she does not mind that I am laughing at her. She thinks it is funny, too, and is not the least bit angry with me.

Sitting in the back seat of a car, driving to a business meeting. I am traveling with three others, who are going to the same meeting. We come to the coast of a harbor filled with boats and ships; the ocean lies beyond. We do not stop at the water's edge, though, but drive right into the surf. The driver says the car is also a boat; however, I am skeptical.

The water is all around us. The waves are a bit choppy, but it is not a stormy sea. In fact, it is a sunny day. And yet, I am concerned. We are riding quite low in the water. Will we sink? Not yet, but I am fearful. Even if the car proves seaworthy, I fear a ship may strike us. I check my safety belt, making sure I can make a quick escape.

The car is a convertible (actually, a detachable hardtop), so the driver asks if she should "pop the top?"

I look out the little window set into the side of the roof and am troubled to see the water line.

"No, don't lower the top! We'll be flooded."

Clearly, the roof is helping to keep out the water. Without it, we will surely be swamped. Again, I wonder if it is really a boat car. And if so, is it designed for ocean travel? If not, then the salt water is ruining it.

Looking through the windshield, I see a big wave heading our way. There is no time to prepare. It crashes over us, and we are submerged.

When the waters recede, I see that we have reached the opposite shore. We are being hauled onto land via a boat ramp. A woman on a power winch (the kind used on tow trucks) has hooked us with a cable and is reeling us in. We have been fished out of the sea.

We try to restart the car, but it won't run. We ask this fisherwoman for help.

"Can't do it," she says. "I've got to pull out another car."

She explains that the other car is the one she was hired to retrieve. She only reeled us in because she happened to be there at the right time. So we leave.

I go to a small church, one with a low ceiling and seating for perhaps a couple of dozen people. A worship service is in progress, and a child is saying the prayer.

Then we hear a crash outside.

No one moves because the child is not done praying. But I jump out of my seat and head for the door.

"I'll be thought of as the hero!" I tell myself.

In front of the church I find a wrecked car with two men inside. I walk over to offer help. The men get out of the car. They are obviously drunk, staggering around. I led them to the side of the church, where I show them a bench upon which they can sit and recover.

In a parking lot on Highway 67 in Oak Cliff. Lots of kids on bikes, including my sons. I am one of the chaperones, leading this group on a bike ride to the buses that will take them to summer camp. We are organized in two columns. I am in charge of one column. There is a teenage girl (a sort of junior chaperone) in front of my column. I am holding her by the waist, but acting as if I am only trying to keep the group together. In truth, my motives are not pure.

While still in the parking lot, we come to a large pot hole that we must negotiate. We are successful, and soon we reach our destination.

This place reminds me of a cross between a college campus and the Methodist orphanage in Waco. The buildings appear to date from the 1950s and 1960s. The interior is paneled in the dark, polished wood common for that era.

We are to put the kids on buses that are waiting in the parking lot, ready to take them to camp. I sit inside on a bench with my youngest son and the teenage girl. I sit quite close to the girl and hold her hand, but act as if it is somehow of no significance. A casual thing, as if I am unaware that we are even touching. She holds my hand for a bit, but I soon realize she is only being polite. She stands up and leaves without speaking.

Now it is time to put my son on the bus, but he tells me he is not supposed to go. Only his older brother gets to go to camp. Unconvinced, I try to reach my wife on the phone. I know what she is going to say, something like "No, I was afraid of that. He is confused. He is really supposed to go."

Still, I must go through the motions, just to be sure. I put money in a pay phone and dial our number. But there's no answer; she's not home.

Again, this is just going through the motions. I don't need to call. I know that both of our sons are supposed to go. And it's only three minutes until time to leave. I would put him on the bus right now if only I could find him.

I look around the room, but it has filled with people, anxious parents here to see off their camp-bound children. My son is no where to be found; however, I see my mother. I shout instructions to her. But she doesn't understand (she can't hear over the crowd), and people are laughing at us. I tell her to come closer, that I can't yell anymore.

I see a snake. It is gray or brown with some blue and reddish orange. It has a round-shaped head, like a coral snake (as opposed to the triangle of a viper). Someone is using a stick or a rod to straighten it out so we can get a better look. There is no danger, for this snake is docile. It doesn't coil up or make any real effort to escape. It does not strike my heel. I do not crush its skull.

Snakes lead two lives. One in the everyday, the other in the psychic reality of the dreamscape. I remember a visit to San Antonio, helping make a movie for a small production company owned by a friend of a friend. It was an all-night party. We hung out in the parking lot of a warehouse near downtown, occasionally stepping in as an extra for this scene or that. In between takes, I'd peer over an embankment to a creek.

It was filled with snakes, several of them with jaws stretched over the heads of fish, gray like death. This was the territory between the living and the dead.

At a sort of motel or perhaps a Sunday school building, where I am attending a week-long class. I do not know the subject. There is a paper lunch sack with items in it, but I do not look inside. These items are related to the class, perhaps art materials. All signs are that this is a vacation Bible school. But there are no kids. All the students are adults. And one of them is LeAnn.

We talk a bit. Clearly, she is not in Paris. But she does tell me she plans to leave town right after the final class on Friday.

Are we clothed? I am not sure. I wonder about this because suddenly I find that I am naked, talking to a woman who is naked. But this woman is not LeAnn.

I don't know this naked woman. She is not ashamed, not hiding her body. But at least part of the time she is lying on her stomach in a way that prevents me from seeing her breasts or crotch. She is sitting or standing at one point, too, but even then I do not see her "nakedness." Perhaps this is the way it was between Adam and Eve before the apple.

As we talk I notice that sweat is beading on her upper lip. Embarrassment? Anticipation? I wonder if she has been flirting with me, though that idea may simply be my response to her nudity.

As we both lie on the floor and talk, I see that she is suddenly looking behind me. Over my shoulder I see that our teacher is outside the open door, looking in. Undoubtedly it would be bad if she found us naked, though there are other people in the room who can already see that we are naked. Perhaps some of them are naked, too. I'm not sure. I am dealing with all the nudity I can handle at the moment.

Staying on her stomach, the naked woman stretches across the floor toward the door, struggling to close it. But she is unsuccessful. I try to reach behind me to close it, too, but do no better. We remain stretched out across the floor, like snakes. The teacher's view remains unobstructed. When she finally looks our way, she will discover our original sin and the discarded apple core. No doubt we will be driven out of this paradise, expelled.

On the coast, giant waves crashing all around me. I see one wave – 20 feet or more high – fall over the roof of a dock. This is actually my uncle's dock, but why is it here? The dock should be at his lake house. He is in the water, which is perhaps waist deep. Also, our Caravelle motor boat is in the water. I am watching from an elevated vantage point, then I am in the water, too.

The waves subside, and I am standing or treading water next to my uncle and the Caravelle. My two sons are in the boat, and it is half to three quarters full of water. I worry that the salt water may ruin the engine; it is not made for the ocean.. The boys are just standing in the boat, thigh high in water.

"Guys, you have to bail out the water," I say.

In truth, I am a little irritated that they are just standing there doing nothing, an admittedly unreasonable emotion because, of course, they are just kids (8 and 10).

They are completely relaxed, and it doesn't occur to them -- or even me -- that they had been in any danger from the giant waves. I only think of the danger later, but even then it seems like a small threat.

I see one of their old plastic bathtub toys floating by, so I toss it into the flooded boat. Then I carry them to shore. I start back towards the water to retrieve the boat. It is not designed for sea journeys. The salt water will corrode the out drive – definitely a total loss if I do nothing. So I must get it out, run fresh water through the out drive so there will be no corrosion. I am not sure if I have the suction cups that allow you to run the motor with a garden hose on land, but I know that I can accomplish the same thing by positioning the boat so that the out drive is in a barrel of water. I will need the boat trailer, but I don't know where I parked it. But I'll worry about that later. The first order of business is to tie up the boat so that it doesn't float away.

But as I stand on shore and look at the boat, the sky suddenly begins to turn black, as if a terrible storm – even worse than the last one – is about to erupt. It's not a storm, though. It is a giant roof, which is descending on this section of the sea.

The water is gone (perhaps pumped out?) and in its place there is now the inside of a store. It is something like a hardware/home improvement store. I realize that I must walk through the store to get to the back door, where I can get to the sea again and retrieve the boat. I step through a glass door set in an interior glass wall, which sections off a department filled with Persian rugs.

On a roller coaster, sitting between two black men. We talk of financial matters, namely investing. One man knows nothing about the subject. But the other – the man on my left – is knowledgeable. As we talk the roller coast goes up and down. We are inside a dark building. As we crest the hills, I scream in anticipation of a plunging, terrifying descent. But then the descent is a nonstarter; it is not fast or frightening at all. I feel like a bit of a coward.

The financial discussion goes well, though, and I am pleased that I am able to express myself so impressively. Or so I believe. I make some point about price-to-earnings ratios. But as I silently congratulate myself, I realize the men are not impressed at all. They see me as socially inept, a sort of geek. After all, I'm talking about price-to-earnings ratios while on a roller coaster. What did I expect?

The roller coaster emerges from the building, and our coaster car leaves the track and continues independently along a city street. Then we find ourselves sitting in the back of a pickup. We pass by the front of a restaurant. What should be the front wall of the business must be all doors, for it is wide open to the street, reminding me of Bourbon Street in New Orleans. The restaurant is a sort of 1950s drive-in burger concept. The booths look like convertibles. They are suspended from the ceiling on a sort of conveyor system, like the chain drive mechanism used for clothes at the dry cleaners. The appliances are moved forward to the counter of the open kitchen, where the meals are served. So there is the illusion of travel.

Now on foot and alone, I am going to pick up my high school ring from the jeweler. It has undergone some sort of repair or refurbishment. I am in Fort Worth, walking on North Main Street between downtown and the Stockyards. I come to the corner where the jewelry store should be, but all I find is a scraped off lot. Only pebble-sized pieces of concrete and dirt remain. Somehow, I understand that my ring is here, but it has been buried in the dirt, left here for me to retrieve. I pick up a stick and scratch at the raw earth, looking for my treasure.

I come upon an old bus parked in a back yard, apparently its final resting place. Hasn't run in years. It looks like a photo I saw recently in the newspaper. It seems that someone wanted to sell what he claimed was the original Rosa Parks bus, an old relic as vine covered and crumbling as ancient Roman ruins.

Through the dust-coated windows, I see that people are being held hostage by a man with a gun. So I run for help, to call for police. I race across the side yard of the house behind my boyhood Cherry Street home. I am running so fast that I leave the ground. I am flying, like Superman. Except this new flying body does not belong to a man.

I arrive at the front door naked, and somehow can see myself as if looking into a full-length mirror: Blonde hair, full breasts, the flawless skin of early 20s. What is this? Clearly, a case of possession by Alien Muse.

I knock on the door, which still has the round porthole window I remember from my childhood. No one answers. The door is unlocked, so I enter. Sure enough, no one is home. The furnishings are from the late 60s, when I still lived across the alley. I spy a dinette table topped in green

Formica, then the old black rotary telephone. I call police, tell them about the hostages in the Rosa Parks bus. Then I see something across the room. It is a man in a chair. He is looking right at me.

I try to explain about the hostages and the bus, but of course the man already knows. He heard my call to police.

Then we are standing outside, next to the detached garage where the man who used to live in the house -- or maybe still does -- had his own ham radio station. It was quite a set up, complete with backyard aerial. I remember that he had a Morse code key, which allowed him to tap out messages to other ham operators all over the world.

Suddenly, I remember I am naked and should not let this man see me. I drape a tablecloth across my front, leaving the unseen backside exposed.

"Don't look," I tell the man.

But he makes no threatening movement. In fact, he has yet to speak. Suddenly, I realize "he" is me, too. Now I am in two bodies -- one male, one female. It is a strange state of affairs, but there is nothing to fear.

We walk inside a neighboring building, which is outfitted like a clothing store. The far wall is made up of open cubes filled with folded jeans. Above a doorway I see a painting. It is a picture of me -- that is, the muse-possessed me -- waist up and nude. But as I watch, the picture changes. No demon this time. Instead, hair begins to grow on the face and breasts. This is not as strange as it sounds. In fact, a few months from now I will find a similar image in a painting from the twilight of the Middle Ages. It is a picture of a hairy man and woman -- cave people -- described in a caption as "the wild condition."

But the transformation does not continue. The woman in the painting reverts to her hairless state. I look again at the wall of jeans, then turn to the man.

He is laying on one of perhaps three beds that dominate the room. He is only wearing his boxers. Others are standing around, but they pay no attention. Then the bystanders begin to file out of the room. One of them, a woman who seems to be their leader, asks if we want her to leave, too.

"I don't mind talking about it, I'm not embarrassed," she tells us. "So you might as well speak now."

We decide to leave.

In a parking lot with my wife. She is at the wheel. She bumps a parked car, hitting it with enough force to send it racing across the lot and bumping into another parked car. She pulls onto the road. Her driving is no better here; she accelerates through a red light, narrowly missing a car that is about to enter the intersection from the left. Then we get on the highway.

We are approaching the big hill at Spur 408 and Interstate 20 in Duncanville, but the ramps and roadways look different. My wife is not sure which way to go; she wants me to tell her. But there is no time. Before I can reply, she makes her selection. Instead of pulling onto one of the highways, though, she has chosen a road marked "Main Street."

"Is this right?" she asks.

In fact, it is not. This will not take us to either highway. But I tell her this is actually a good choice.

"I have always wanted to take this road, which will allow me to finally see the house on the hill."

For years I have caught brief glimpses of the house, tucked into the cedar and red oaks. It is visible over my shoulder while heading westbound on I-20 and descending "Monster Mountain," as that geographical feature was known locally in my high school days. Now I will finally be able to see the house up close.

But as we approach, I realize the house is actually a restaurant. And instead of being tucked into the side of a hill, the restaurant is on the banks of the Trinity River. It is actually one in a line of restaurants -- a restaurant row. It occurs to me that this development is like the waterfront re-developments that have been undertaken in several major cities, except this one is just a "development." No "re," for it is an original creation. They are making all into one, creating necessity out of nothingness.

Driving in Many, La., the last town this side of Fort Jesup. I am towing a boat. Both boat and car are white. The boat is for bass fishing. The car is a Camaro or Firebird. These vehicles belong to my dad, who grew up here.

As I travel along one of the main streets, I notice how much the businesses have changed from what I remember during boyhood visits. I stop and look in one storefront that used to be an auto parts shop. It changed uses several times, and it now appears to be permanently closed. I look in the dark windows and see forgotten books. In the building's final incarnation, it was apparently some sort of second hand store or antique shop. The owner just locked the doors one day and never came back.

I return that night, hoping to get a second look. I peer into the window, then proceed to a big hardware store, which is also closed. I park in the side lot, which is out of sight but well lit. It seems safe enough; I don't worry. I walk up to the closed store, then turn around to walk back to the car and boat. But I find that two young men are stealing it.

One of them sneers at me, shouts something. He thinks it is funny. Then the bad guys are gone. And somehow I realize that they have stolen more than the car and boat; I have no clothes. I am standing alone in the parking lot, naked. Some of the town's young men have watched the whole thing and laugh a bit. But one of them offers to help.

I go with him and his friends into a house where they are staying. The young man tells me that the first thing we should do is call a certain person (I don't recall the name) who knows everything that goes on in town.

"He'll know who's got your car and boat," he says.

I tell him and the others that my big concern for the moment is getting some clothes. But no one has any to lend me. One guy says he has an extra set, but it is his clean clothes that he must wear the next day.

"My father is coming to visit," he explains.

At least that at least one other man has a father who will be visiting, too, so it's a big event.

I look on the floor and find a pile of old bedspreads and rugs, faded red. I decide I will simply wrap an old bath mat around my waist. It is wet because the men have been taking showers, getting ready for the fathers' visit. Now the sun is coming up. Leaning against the window frame, I look out at the road and take stock. I have lost my dad's car and boat, and I have no clothes. I'm not sure what I will do. Clearly, this is a noteworthy setback in the journey.

At school, looking for the room where I will attend my first class of the year. The halls are laid out as rays off a central, curving hall. In some places it looks like a '50s-era hospital, with white or light colored tiles on the walls. But in other places, it looks like the inside of the old adult Sunday school building at First United Methodist Church in Duncanville. I see Scott Paulson and other people I know, both from my school days and present time.

During the search, I join up with an unsavory group led by Will Chrison. He was a bad seed, a boy who once tried to break a glass jar on my back. He died when I was in high school. But death obviously taught him nothing, for I discover he is still as bad as I remember. In a stairwell, I drop an audio cassette tape. Will reclines on the stairs, sneering at me. Somehow, I suspect he has made the tape fall out of my hand. He must have demonic powers. I should have known. And, of course, I realize he will use his powers to do worse. I decide to leave this group and continue on my own.

Back in the hallway, I meet a black woman, an employee. She tells me I am looking for the class called "Basics of Economics." It is in the big auditorium, where some parents typically sit for the first day of classes. She gives me directions. I cross a large plaza with an Olympic size pool in the middle. Then I take the side street on the left, which is where I find the entrance to my class.

I am standing in the street in front of the auditorium building. It presents a sort of European façade, complete with half-timber construction. From the front lawn a boy taunts me. I understand him to be a friend or associate of Will. They are certainly cut from the same cloth. The boy holds a bottle of white wine. Others look on, placing me in an unwelcome spotlight. I say nothing, holding in my anger. I am praying (somehow I know that he is also ridiculing God), and I wish that he would be punished by the power of God. And then it happens. He disappears. Only the bottle remains, lying alone on the lawn.

Someone says something about this incident involving "Old Scratch," the devil.

Two women I know have been watching. They are sitting on beds that have been set up on balconies or flat roofs protruding from the auditorium building. I join them, sitting on a third, empty bed. The two women are positioned between me and the place where the boy disappeared. As we sit there, I explain to the women that God took the boy away. We talk a bit more. Perhaps "Old Scratch" is again mentioned. I can't say for sure.

Then it begins to rain, big drops. The two women hide under the covers of their beds. I consider getting under the covers of my bed; however I see that each drop immediately soaks all the way through the cloth. The bedspreads are made of the same thin, ripcord type fabric I had on my bed when I was a boy – totally useless against rain.

As I watch the downpour, I look down the street in the direction where the boy disappeared. I see a strange form round the corner and approach us. It is Old Scratch – or, rather, his head.

This disembodied being is wearing a hood, and smoke swirls about his bearded face. He has no body, but moves towards us with ease, floating under his own unseen power. I am praying for the aid of God. I also tell the women who is approaching, for they seem not to know him. The devil's business is clear: He wants to know what happened to his follower.

On a Cub Scout camp out. We are in rowboats, floating around a series of boat-sized islands. It looks like a swamp, maybe the Everglades or even the far north end of lake where my parents have a house. We are in search of a campsite. And apparently we find one. For next we are on dry land, staking out some sort of foundation. I am using string and stakes and white PVC. The group is very pleased with the way the foundation is shaping up; even my wife comes over to thank me for my good work. Everyone is pleased – everyone but me, that is.

I regard my work as messy, sloppy. Stakes have been planted sideways; the string sags in unfortunate ways. I am sure if the others could only see an example of a proper foundation, then they would see that we should not be so pleased. Still, I suppose it is something. It is a start.

At home with my wife and our boys, planning out a weekly class schedule for myself. I can't recall the details, though I think that at noon on Mondays and Wednesdays there is an athletic activity. I share a cold drink with the boys. We are sitting at an outside table or perhaps on the front steps of the house. My youngest son holds a short, squat glass with a long straw. Upon inspection, I see that the straw is actually three straws plugged into each other. This drink with the extra long straw is for me. I can't help asking myself "Isn't this a bit of a stretch?"

Watching two rotating circular platforms. These platforms bear two-dimensional, full-size human cutouts, like the ones used in the original Mr. Peppermint TV show. At the point where the two platforms come together, the cutouts come together, then depart, as if greeting one another. The whole thing is like a giant clockwork mechanism, one of those antique German clocks in which mechanized figures emerge from inside the clock to announce the hour.

The cutouts themselves do not move. Except for the mouths, which open and close like a camera aperture. Words are formed, but I do not understand them. The eyes of each cutout are holes, too. A person can stand behind the cutout and look through the holes, experiencing the world as a two-dimension being. It seems to me that the talking faces – vacant expressions, but with the real eyes peering out from the holes -- have the look of being trapped, no control. I am terrified for them.

Back at Duncanville High School. I am behind in my schoolwork, so I am hoping to avoid attending some of the classes in which I am farthest behind. I have not done my homework! Like so many school days, I come to myself and realize that I have not done my work. But I must still go to class. I fear being revealed and receiving a failing grade. Will my education never end?

Two teachers stand at the end of a hallway. One of them is Lee Stakhanov, a colleague from work. He is handing out papers, including a sort of program. I take one, but then I am told I must give it to another student. I am offended.

"Wait," Lee says, "here is one for you."

"No, no, you keep it for someone who needs it. I'll be fine."

In other words, I play the martyr. I abruptly walk off, so that I can have the last word.

I take a seat by myself at a table next to the windows that look out on the outside commons area. A friend approaches with several girls.

"You coming to the party?" he asks.

He is talking about a party planned for the weekend somewhere outside of town. But I am still fuming about the program and will not talk. The friend tries to cheer me up. From where he is standing, he uses the toe of his shoe to lift up my pants leg, then looks down at my leg and back up at me with raised eyebrows, as if leering at me. This is supposed to be funny, and he does it twice. I still do not react, but he is untroubled.

"You know, this party will be a sort of shake-out for a much bigger one later one, maybe on the 4th of July," he says. "So it's going to be good one."

I still say nothing, so my friend and the girls leave. Immediately it occurs to me that I acted foolishly. They all came to talk to me; I should have been more communicative. After all, there were girls. I am filled with regret.

Then it's time to go to class. Another friend -- Jon Livrus, I think -- approaches.

"Where's our next class?" he asks.

We have the same schedule. I look at my class printout. It is speech. The teacher looks like Ted Baxter, the anchorman from the Mary Tyler Moore Show.

Jon and I walk together to the classroom, which is in a part of the original high school campus. The building bears a metal plaque of LBJ, who was president when the school was built. In fact, the school was originally to have been named for him, but the plan was scrapped after he failed to attend the dedication.

As we walk, I realize that today is probably my turn to give a speech. The speech was due last week, but I was out sick. The assignment is to speak about someone we know. I begin to think of people I could talk about, perhaps a friend. There is no time to write a speech, but I could just say "I come without a prepared speech, so I'll just make a few remarks" about the person I select. I think that if I can come up with a few coherent thoughts and speak with confidence, perhaps I will get a good grade for doing well off the cuff. I enter the classroom, but then realize I need to go to the restroom.

I go to the men's room a short distance away. Now I am only wearing underpants, which I take off and toss in the wastebasket. I move toward a urinal, then realize my mistake: I am naked. I go back and retrieve my underwear. It's not much clothing, but definitely better than walking around in the nude.

I stand at a urinal, but am unable to do my business because Ron Joppeh is standing a few steps behind me, far too close for restroom comfort. He has no intention of doing anything to me, of course. I know he is just being funny, annoying me. I turn around and he flashes a mischievous smile. So I read a magazine instead.

There is a photo of a man, a rugged, masculine type, like you'd expect to see in the oil drilling business. In the accompanying story, he says he is unhappy because a perfectly good oil well has been intentionally fouled with salt water, which was injected as part of the extraction process. There is also an ad for a wristwatch, one with a rectangular-style face.

Others are now in the men's room. Again, I decide to relieve myself. I step over to a low wall, which encloses a circular area paved in blacktop. I direct my stream into this circular area, working carefully until I darken the entire blacktopped surface.

Bert Roldsteig from college is back in town for a visit. I will take him from SMU to the airport. But for some reason, I drive him through Duncanville, which is completely out of the way. We travel down Peach Street, past the side of my old house on Cherry Street. The house has been remodeled. The brick addition, built by my father in the late 1960s, is gone. A narrow, high-roofed front porch has been added. The wood siding is still stained red, but the trim is white. Also, someone has remodeled the house across the street in the same way, giving it a low-pitched roof.

We turn right onto Center Street and a few blocks later pull into the driveway of the old home on Woodacre Circle.

It was full daylight before, but now it seems to be dark. There are neighborhood kids around. In the driveway I find two trash bags, each contains a watermelon standing on end. The melons have withered away inside; they are hollow and shake like Jell-O.

Inside the house, I find a wild rabbit, jumping around crazily. It has been placed here on purpose. The hope is it will become tame, a pet.

I am in a room with executives from work and the military. A military officer is sitting in a chair -- perhaps behind a desk or table -- in the middle of the room. He is making some observation about the positive parallels between the work of our company and the military. I believe the other military officers are sitting or standing beside or behind him. The company men are sitting in plain chairs -- maybe folding chairs, a half dozen -- that line two walls and face the military man. I am the only one standing, as if there is no place for me. Not military and not an executive, I really don't fit into either group. As I stand there, I feel an incredible pressure in my face, almost more than I can bear.

Of course I felt incredible pressure. The military is at the heart of many government/alien conspiracies. This is well understood by the staff of the Armageddon Drive-In. Here is a message that hangs over a doorway in the concession stand:

"The Christian congregations of my community had come together to take us all to a drive-in movie theater. When we got there they split us up into two groups: The ones who were going with God and the ones who were staying on Earth. And of course I was in the group that was staying."

Is that not the way of it? Coming soon to an apocalypse near you. Welcome to the Armageddon Drive-in. Purchase your bucket of popcorn and soft drink and prepare yourself for a celluloid voyage of dark violence, of vines strangling the pulpit and moths consuming the flag -- and an important discovery of why so many people who appear to be alive are really dead. We'll be showing 1950s B-movie Sci-Fi: bleeding walls, extraterrestrial insects, vast government conspiracies, evil corporate cabals and the last dying gasps of the American newspaper industry. The end is near.

Have you read their news releases? Very illuminating. Twilight wind across a rolling prairie, snagged in an old barbed wire fence, wind whistling through tombstones... a cowboy on acid, a cowboy gone insane, a cowboy like the one in "El Topo," Alejandro Jodorowsky's surreal spaghetti Western of 1970 that became the world's first Midnight movie. A crazed cowboy on the big screen. Here at the Armageddon Drive-in, we cannot wait to once again see 40-foot tall gutted donkeys, dead bunnies and guru gunslingers. After "El Topo's" New York re-release in December 2006, the videotape will travel the country as a double feature with the Chilean-born director's 1973 proposition, "The Holy Mountain." Best of all, a DVD release is planned for these titles and "Fando y Lis." Thank you, John Lennon.

Attention Bellerophon Shield. David Lynch is holding on the red phone. He wants to lend you his embalmed calf fetus for the baby scenes. Ah, the Cult of Lynch. "There are, in the movies, few places creepier to spend time than in David Lynch's head," writes Manohla Dargis in a New York Times review of "Inland Empire," Lynch's new movie that opened Dec. 6, 2006. The staff of the Armageddon Drive-in has high hopes for this latest installment of Lynch noir. And yet, nothing Lynch might put on videotape could ever hope to compare to "Eraserhead," one of our all-time Midnight movie/embalmed calf fetus favorites. We're feeling creepy just thinking about it! Nevertheless, we are still willing to wear a blindfold while projecting the rushes. "Stephen, I don't wanna, uh . . . talk about that."

Stacks of gray steel videotape canisters and a cacophony of incomprehensible voices from the sanctioned psychic manifest, nightmare metaphors of violent purple twilight and unfulfilled judgments and dreams. Vacant hallways. Conference rooms. Hallways. Windows. Windows. Conference rooms. Unoccupied seating, plush sofas, deep rugs. Substantial tapestries. Ladders, rungs. Rungs, one above the next. Porcelain items, items remaining complete, vacant bowls. A knife that descends through a countdown: Three, two, one, zero. Porcelain walls, documents....Perhaps the operation even continues today, hidden away in the antechamber of some underground bunker connected via high-speed pneumatic tunnels to Applianceswell ...UPDATE! SECRET SUBWAY FOUND BENEATH FORT WORTH DRIVE-IN ... The staff of the Armageddon Drive-in has learned that a high-speed pneumatic subway tunnel has been discovered beneath the Fort Worth Twin Drive-in. A former petroleum geologist-turned-homeless person who lived in a cardboard box at the property before it was cleared of brush and debris in July 2006 reports that he often accessed this subterranean transit structure by way of a hidden surface entrance manipulated by an autonomous nanobot system activated through special magnets and natural piezoelectric crystals. This report positively correlates with established stories of a high-speed pneumatic subway system between the underground alien recovery labs at Applianceswell AFB in Fort Worth, the old Aurora "glider base" and the Nike missile base in Duncanville -- the three points of the infamous "Alien Triangle" that forms the heart of the D/FW Alienplex. Sadly, the July 2006 cleanup work seriously damaged the autonomous nanobot system, eliminating surface access to the pneumatic tunnel. But we will continue to monitor this situation and issue follow-up reports as new information becomes available.

They stood around in open necked shirts and cummerbunds, looking serious and decisive. Think JFK and "Missiles of October." Who killed JFK? Here at the Armageddon Drive-in, we have uncovered never-before-contemplated suggestions that the assassination of John F. Kennedy was part of an evil corporate cabal initiated by the Greys of Zeti Reticuli.

Consider the JFK research work of Jim Marrs. Pretty. And yet we are of the opinion that he doesn't go nearly far enough to expose the true nature of this intergalactic conspiracy. The staff of Armageddon Drive-in has located an early '60s Central Intelligence Agency manuscript that documents the substance of a Telstar satellite communication between Marilyn Monroe and Dallas nightclub owner Jack Ruby two days before the blonde bombshell was executed via the government's "remote viewing" program called Project Brain Detonation. Throughout the communication, Monroe notifies Ruby that Kennedy informed her of his unscheduled appointment at an underground military installation (perhaps the subterranean alien recovery base in Aurora, Texas?) where he saw recovered effects from the cosmos and classified documents concerning the UFO/military conspiracy in North Texas, specifically the D/FW Alienplex. Ruby suspected the North Texas material was associated with the Roswell conspiracy, specifically the transfer of alien remains to Applianceswell AFB in Fort Worth for study at the Aurora facility in connection with general research prerogatives within the infamous "Alien Triangle."

Moreover, a Federal Bureau of Investigation manuscript of the late 1940s corroborates that JFK was cognizant of the D/FW Alienplex. And Texas billionaire William "Dollar Bill" Buckstop apparently engaged in a secret dialogue with JFK in the early '60s. While enjoying a couple of Cuban cigars and brandy liberally served from a cut crystal decanter, "Dollar Bill" apparently asked Kennedy about his opinions regarding flying saucers over Duncanville, which by then was a well-known gathering spot for extraterrestrials. Reports from a domestic servant present during the discussion indicate that JFK suddenly developed an extremely somber disposition and countered "Dollar Bill, I would like to tell the public about the UFO/military conspiracy, but my hands are tied."

Nevertheless, we are aware of proof via reconstructed facts that, on Sept. 31, 1963, the President instructed the CIA to reveal all extraterrestrial manuscripts to the White House. This did not sit well with the Greys, who used a viral DNA dream phone to implant assassination suggestions directly into the brain of Buckstop. Two weeks later JFK was shot in Dallas, Texas, the heart of the D/FW Alienplex and the "Alien Triangle." It is well known that the patsy Lee Harvey Oswald immediately fled south to Oak Cliff, an area of Dallas adjacent to Duncanville along Interstate 35 (aka "The Alien Assassination Highway"). Could it be that Oswald was headed to a Buckstop-arranged rendezvous point at the Nike missile base in Duncanville, where a UFO was standing by to aid him in his escape?

Coincidence? We don't think so.

I am driving a car by myself, on a road next to a highway. I am trying to get on the highway, but I drive past the ramp. So I do a U-turn and double back. But the roads and signs are confusing. I can't figure out how to get on the highway, even though it is in plain sight on the other side of the railing only a few yards away.

Preparing to give a talk about a book at a gathering at SMU. The campus is a couple of hours away, but I have not fully prepared my remarks or even finished reading the book. This talk is somehow work related, for I am in a workplace with my boss. And then one of our former bosses shows up, and the two of them joke about how this task has fallen to me. As they talk, I am looking in a refrigerator for something.

Then I am outside in the parking lot; it is actually the one outside the MJ Designs in Lewisville, near Vista Ridge Mall. Several other people, mostly women I think, are traveling with me and will listen to my talk. I am the driver. A few blocks into our journey, the road beside the mall inexplicably takes on a rural ambience reminiscent of the El Camino Real near Fort Jesup. I have regained the road to the Land of the Dead.

One of my passengers is Lois Neid, a friend from church and my boys' Cub Scout pack. She asks me about my talk. I realize I have left my notes behind. I tell her I'm not going back, though; I will just wing it. She is not optimistic – nor am I. We talk about what we will do upon our arrival. I tell her of the sights, which somehow involve George Washington. She misunderstands, thinks I am telling her that we will see Washington's grave.

"No," I explain, "he is not buried here, but back at Mount Vernon or some place in the East."

We arrive at our destination. It is a hotel adjoining the campus, a sort of resort with '50s/'60s style architecture. I am at an outside gift shop with Jack Bryson. I pick up a sort of Mexican or Latin American souvenir. It looks like a face (a mask, perhaps?). I carry it around for a while, then soon realize I must pay for it. But I can't find my way back to the shop. I wander up a flight of steps to the hotel restaurant, but I decide not to go in because it is not supposed to be used as a passageway. But it does remind me that I need to eat. I look for Jack, but can't find him. Blake Robb, a colleague from work, walks up. He asks about lunch, though I don't hear exactly what he says.

Now I realize that I must go give my talk. And everyone who drove with me is off doing their own thing. How can I round them all up? I decide to leave a note. This note must tell them where I am going and it must sell them on the idea of coming to hear my talk. I sketch out a draft with a black felt tip marker on a slick granite wall. Then I realize this is silly; now I must transfer what I write to paper. And I have a momentary panic: What if the marker won't come off the stone? But I reach up and easily wipe away some of the words with my hand.

In Waco at my maternal grandfather's last house, the one he lived in after he sold the house where my mother was raised. My former Aunt Gretchen ("former" due to a divorce many years ago) owns it now. She is selling off the contents. It's a jumbled mess, still looking just as it did after my grandfather died and the family members gathered to sort through it all. I was 14 at the time, so it's really a 26-year-old time capsule. I am there with two boys. They are having a fine time, running around and shoving each other. Still, they have picked out a few books. We are to pay $2 per item. But my aunt is annoyed with them, and she tells us to leave.

This is disappointing. I have only selected one book. To show her that I am not like the irresponsible boys, I pay my money immediately. The others will pay tomorrow, during the last day of the sale. I leave the money on the table. As I am walking outside, I look at the cover of the one book I had time to get. It is titled "Analytical Psychology," a college textbook. I note that it is smaller than the texts I used in college, so I know it is older and probably dates from a few years before my college time, perhaps when my aunt was in school. Or maybe it comes from the college across the street. Because when I step outside I see the Baylor University campus.

I turn left and walk to the house next door, where I am staying. My dad is there, dressed but lying on top of a made bed. We discuss plans for a visit to the lake house. We are to arrive on Friday night, but I see a problem because I am supposed to meet a Realtor at my parent's home in Strangers Rest. It won't take but a few minutes, just long enough for the Realtor to put up a sign and attend to some other small details. My folks are selling their house, but I don't know why I am the one meeting the Realtor. This is their house, their business.

"I won't be able to go to the lake unless you can work out the Realtor deal on your own," I say.

Then I go to the bathroom. I look behind me and realize I have left the door open. A woman sees me, but does not stare. I am embarrassed. Worse still, I look down at the floor and see that I have missed the toilet. Urine is everywhere.

I start trying to clean up the mess with toilet paper, but there is too much liquid. The puddle has spread under the washing machine, which sits beside the toilet. The liquid has mixed with dust and green detergent, making an even bigger mess. I decide to use some of the clothes I brought for the trip, clothes I've already worn. Then I throw the clothes and toilet paper into the washing machine. Everything will be fine. But then I realize I can't wash this load; the paper will mess up everything. So I start unloading, which I realize will be a messy process because I will have to touch all of the urine-soaked toilet paper and clothes. All the while, I realize that I am hogging the bathroom. Other visiting relatives need to use it, too.

I see a man at the bathroom's previously unseen backdoor.

"I'm sorry, I'll try to finish quickly," I say.

"That's OK, I just wanted to get my shoes."

He reaches inside the door and picks them up.

It is a Sunday morning, almost noon. I realize that I have a math test on Tuesday for a class in which I have done no work. But it occurs to me that I have time to cram on Sunday afternoon and can ready myself for the test. And this strategy must have worked. For the next thing I know, I am sitting down in a classroom where several of us are to receive certificates of achievement.

As I sit in the front row, I realize I am not wearing a shirt. But I do have with me a sweaty shirt with an undershirt inside it. I determine the outer shirt is too smelly to put on, but for some reason the undershirt will be acceptable. So as the teacher calls out names for students to come forward to receive their certificates, I hastily struggle to extricate the T-shirt so I can put it on before my name is called.

With a travel group on the Texas Gulf Coast, taking a boat ride. The man at the helm – our captain and guide – takes us on a fast ride. We zip past little islands, some just big enough to stand on, all the while heading toward the largest of the islands.

This main island is dominated by an old brick structure. There are no windows. An arch-type design element is set into the brickwork. Perhaps it has a flat roof; I can't say for sure. Later, it will occur to me that the structure reminds me of Fort Sumter, the place where Confederate troops fired the first shots of the Civil War.

As we motor up to the island, we circle around on the ocean side. On the ground I notice giant, rootlike structures. They lie on top of the soil, like vines. The roots are thick cables, and the surface is just like the outer husk of a coconut. As we pass the island, I see that we are now heading back toward the beach, as if we have been in a harbor rather than the open sea. I ask our guide about the purpose of the old building.

"It was a hospital," he replies.

But he doesn't sound certain, and I am not convinced that he is correct.

"Why is the building on an island, separated from the land?" I ask, then immediately volunteer my theory.

"Maybe the building was once on the mainland but the shoreline has changed over the years, cutting it off from the rest of the land."

The guide does not respond.

Then our boat is suddenly a car, and our guide is driving us along a road that parallels the shore.

"Next, we will see the original downtown of Corpus Christi," he says.

Corpus Christi, the Body of Christ. I am excited because we will see the real town, the one where the locals go – not the town that is maintained for the tourists.

The road and shoreline separate as we approach the downtown. It appears to be a typical rural Texas town, a few blocks of old buildings crowded together up against an empty street. We approach on a two-lane highway that skirts the edge of – but does not enter – the downtown, which lies on the right side of the road. The first portion (roughly half the land area) consists of old corrugated metal warehouse buildings. The cross street is marked by a sort of entry made out of the metal, which is obviously intended to play off the old buildings. On the sign there is a multi-word name, but I do not recall it – perhaps something that uses the word "market" or "marketplace." I realize that some developer has created this marketing concept in hopes of revitalizing and reusing the old buildings. The sign is colorful yet muted – a perfect match for the weathered metal.

A block later we reach the retail area. As we pass, I look back to get a better look. There is some revitalization here, too. I see three or four businesses. One is an ice cream parlor. Another is a restaurant with a front sign in neon of a cartoon-like pig face. As I look at it, I am thinking the place is like the Red, Hot and Blue restaurant chain.

A short distance later, we stop at an ice cream parlor on the left side of the highway. Once inside, I tell everyone that I am handling the food purchase (apparently, this is by design and was decided in advance as part of our trip arrangements).

"But you must pay me," I add.

I am standing next to a seated man from our group, and he has a complaint.

"You owe me money from a previous purchase," he says, "but I'll still give you some money."

He holds out $5. I decline to accept it.

"Since I owe you, you should keep your money. You are taken care of."

Then a man walks up behind me and begins to talk to this seated man. I do not look, but only listen. They begin to discuss and negotiate a drug purchase.

I understand it is marijuana. They are very blatant, discussing amounts and prices. It is friendly, not at all part of a seamy, dangerous drug underground. I realize they are friendly because they see themselves as part of the same club. As I listen, it occurs to me that we are visiting a foreign place where this is not illegal or at least is tolerated.

The transaction is completed, and the seated man begins to smoke a joint. I am handed a paper sack that is printed up in a colorful fashion and would be clearly understood by anyone who sees it to be a bag that is used for the sale of marijuana. The sack has a sort of stick glued to the outside. The stick is like a lighter; it is attached with a spot of glue in the middle to the bag so that the ends are unattached. One end has been lit; it is smoldering, drawing even more attention to me. I do not like it that I am holding this drug bag, because it is like a billboard. Anyone who see it will know I am in possession of drugs. I decide it would be far less noticeable for me to put the drugs in my pants pocket and throw away the all-too-obvious bag.

Meanwhile, the woman who is managing the place is disturbed by the drug sale. She doesn't want that sort of activity going on in her place, giving it a bad name.

"Maybe I should call the police," she says.

But I am not afraid of being arrested. I reason that I am an outstanding, responsible citizen, and the police will find I have no tickets or warrants or records or anything they can prosecute. Again, drugs are obviously not a crime here. So although the circumstances makes me look suspicious, I face no real legal dangers.

I approach the men's room, but I see that the woman manager has entered ahead of me. I wonder about this. Could it be a unisex restroom? Or does she feel free to use any restroom just because she works here? Then I notice the words on the door. It really is the women's room, but the "W" and "O" are missing. I can only see the faint outlines of the letters. So I go instead to the real men's room.

Inside it is very large and nice, like one of the dressing rooms at the old Sanger Harris at Redbird Mall, where I worked in college. I go into one of the stalls. It is huge, quite luxurious. There is a counter next to the toilet, which is huge, too. It has a very wide seat, perhaps 20 percent larger than normal. It makes me think of Jack Bryson, who likes to have a big toilet to sit on during his lengthy "toils." I sit down, thinking about how the toilet is so wide it probably wouldn't fit in the rather narrow toilet nook in the master suite at my house back in Strangers Rest.

At a scouting event, a sort of combined District Camporee and Scout Show. I am threatened by a man with a pistol. He wants money; a figure is mentioned, something in the hundreds of dollars ($200 or $600?). But I can tell this to no one, even though there are people all around. This is a secret robbery.

I begin to devise a plan: Write a call for help on a piece of paper and slip it to someone surreptitiously. Then the gunman tells me I must take a piece of paper (or perhaps a greeting card) around to various district leaders and get their signature as well as some written comment. Somehow, though, this still has to do with the money. I begin to wander about. It is dark, as if early morning before sunrise. I can barely see anyone, and I can recognize faces only if they are a few inches away. People are milling about, preparing to break camp and go home. It does not occur to me that I am free, that I can now get help. Still, I have no intention of gathering the signatures. I simply wander about, without direction – just trying to get a feel for what is going on.

Driving with a woman in a car. We travel up to the shore of a new lake, one that has been impounded but has not yet filled. It contains just a small amount of water. One of my Louisiana uncles is there with a boat he has purchased for use on this lake. Somehow I know or believe it to be for fishing with his family, but the boat is a single-seater – not suitable for a family at all. In fact, it looks like a dragster. Clearly this boat is built for personal speed, not family fishing. He cares nothing for his family.

At the Colonial Country Club in Fort Worth. My company regularly uses the club for various gatherings. My task is to leave a sack of supplies at the front desk, where it will be kept until we need it.

I am in a sort of stairwell/passageway. It winds about, and I am not sure of the way. There are people here, including a woman I know. Eventually I end up at the front desk (actually, a window in a wall), where I explain to an employee what I am trying to do.

“I am not even sure if this is permissible,” I admit.

But I learn that there is no problem. He takes the sack from me. My work is complete.

Then I am with the woman again. She is blonde, well dressed and attractive. We have somehow recently made a connection. I cannot quite believe that she would find me appealing, even though I am available. (Apparently, I am not married.)

Then I find myself on the front lawn of the Colonial, without the woman but with several men I know. One of them is Ian Breel, a college friend who I have not seen in more than a decade. One of the men kids me about the woman.

“She is missing a tooth,” he says.

I laugh and tell him he is crazy.

“There is nothing wrong with her teeth!”

But he insists. Then, somehow, we are back inside the clubhouse, looking through an open door into the anterior alcove (sink, mirror and counter) of the ladies room. There is a woman here. She is supposed to be the blond woman. But quickly I see that she is someone different.

She is dressed nicely, but plain (a dark, thin sweater blouse). And she has brown hair and is older than the first woman. She is putting on makeup or perhaps brushing her hair. I approach her and look at her face, which has the lines and pores of mid-life. She does not speak, but looks sad and somewhat apprehensive. I don’t find her attractive, and yet I sense that I should kiss her -- even though she clearly is afraid that I might. She does not want me to kiss her. And yet, I feel that she needs my kiss. A kiss would heal her.

Then we are in a different part of the club, and she is sitting on the floor. I am facing her, looking into her face and eyes. Now I do feel an urge to kiss her and take off her clothes. I look into her eyes, but there is only fear or sadness -- or both. Still, I sense that part of her cannot believe that I would even find her appealing. This only intensifies my urge.

Pursued by a Bengal tiger. I am in a two-story house, trying to get away from this tiger that is inexplicably inside. How did it get here? I don’t know, and there’s no time to wonder.

I go into the garage and close the door to the house, but still I am not safe. I see that the tiger has gotten through the door and is in the garage. I yell loudly at it, in a ferocious way. I am apparently convincing, because the animal jumps back into the house.

After it leaves, I see that the door that I thought would hold it back has an enormous gap at the bottom. Plus, it has been repaired with pieces of plywood. Not very substantial. So I decide to take a side door to the outside. This door has also been repaired with plywood, and I realize it will not hold back the tiger, either. My only hope is to run.

I find myself in a typically subdivision of the 1970s. I turn right and run down the sidewalk, which gently curves to the left. In the sidewalk, I come to a parked bike, which could help in my escape but I do not take it. That would be stealing and cause even more problems for me.

Next, I come upon a tall, cylindrical object, perhaps 6 feet high. I do not know its purpose, but it reminds me a bit of a crayon standing on its flat end. I do not know its purpose. Like the bike, it too has been left in the middle of the sidewalk.

I reach the end of the street, arriving at a larger thoroughfare. This road appears to be Big Stone Gap in Duncanville. Across the street, children are playing in a field or perhaps a park. There are many bikes parked here. But again, I do not take any of them. Instead, I turn right and continue running. It occurs to me that the tiger will be able to track me by scent, so I decide to leave the sidewalk. I run on the grass a short distance, thinking this will throw him off. Next I come to a park, and sitting by the road I see a woman with her child. I run over to her. She has a cell phone, so I ask if I can use it to call the police. But she makes the phone call herself.

“Yes, there is a problem here and my cousin needs help,” she tells the dispatcher.

I am amazed that she knows me and that we are related. I don’t even recognize her.

On a school campus, apparently at a college. I emerge from a building to join others in a sort of outside commons area. People are coming and going, others are sitting in chairs or on the ground. In one group, a female student points at something behind me, perhaps the sky.

“It is coming,” she says.

One of the other women is my mother (or at least someone like her). This woman seeks a more specific answer. She observes that there is a finger or strand of cloud in the sky.

“But it doesn’t threaten bad weather,” she adds.

The student does not rise to this statement; she gives no more detail.

I move away from this gathering, following a sidewalk across a wide expanse of lawn. I come upon a woman I know, a student my age. (I am again in my early 20s.) She is sitting on the ground next to the sidewalk, dabbing her face with a paper towel. I do the same, for a few scattered raindrops are falling. We begin to talk and walk together toward the nearby buildings. There is an older woman, possibly a teacher, who is using tree clippers to trim low-hanging branches from a smallish tree by the sidewalk. The tree is 10 to 15 feet tall. I don’t recall the first part of the discussion, as I am lost in thought. But then I weigh in.

“The world would be a much better place if we got rid of 10 percent of the people. That is, the 10 percent who are unpleasant. Out of any 10 people we all can point to one person who, if eliminated, would result in an immediate improvement.”

Neither woman has a response. Then the student and I walk to the buildings.

They are lined up, much like the classroom buildings of my high school. But they are dormitories.

I like this woman, and it occurs to me that I would like to invite her into my dorm room. Instead, she suggests we go to hers, and I follow her through the door into her building. Again, the inside is like high school. It is a wide hallway lined with lockers. At the end of the hallway is a glass door, which reveals a different building that contains classrooms. I am still following the woman, but she is now perhaps 20 feet ahead of me as she reaches her room. There are people spilling out of the open door into the hall, creating quite a commotion. She engages in a sort of playful fight with them, tussling with one man briefly before entering her room.

When I reach the group, I too am drawn into a friendly wrestling match. One man has me in a hold from behind; I feel his chin poking me in the back. As I am allowed back on my feet, I comment to one of the men that someone with a pointy chin was just wrestling me. Then I see the man for the first time. He is taller than me and obviously athletic. But his chin is not pointy at all. Instead it is large and juts out, like Jay Leno. I feel bad that I described it as a pointy chin, so I tell him it really isn't pointy.

"You're just big, big all over."

Then I enter the room. It is filled with people. One of the men from the hall walks me over to a seat. I see now for the first time that he is very short, like a midget. He tells me to kneel in a certain spot while he steps up on a raised portion of the floor. We are now the same height. I realize that he is going to continue the fighting.

"What, you're going to hit me?" I say.

But I am not afraid. It seems like a joke. It is not serious, just a continuation of the friendly wrestling in the hall. He lines up to punch me in the mouth, and I decide that upon impact I will spew saliva out of my mouth, so that it will look like blood.

Working again at the Tarrant County Register, my old employer of four years ago. I am in a suburban office (Northeast Tarrant County Bureau, of course). We are waiting for a shipment of papers. I see a delivery truck drive past the front of the office. Later, one of the editors asks about the deliver of these papers.

"Where are they?"

"I don't know, but I saw the truck earlier," I say.

I am pleased to be the one who is in the know, who has the best information.

Then, I pick up clothes from the dry cleaner. One of the items is a skirt, but it has a huge waist. Enormous! I think the skirt belongs to a co-worker, but I'm not sure. I show it to my wife.

"This has to be a mistake," she says. "You should go back to the cleaner to make this right."

But I am not sure. After all, it occurs to me that the skirt may have been purchased too large. The problem would then need to be resolved by the store. At any rate, I don't want to bother with it. So I attempt to distract her, make her forget. I put the skirt on my head, like a hood, and say my line: "Luke, use the Force!"

Now in the kitchen with my wife. It is night, time for sleep.

"Did we close the garage door?" she asks.

So I go to the door that leads to the garage, look through a peep hole that I didn't even know we had. I see nothing; it is too dark. So I open the door.

I encounter a man in a white hockey mask. He is bent over, leaning inside the open front passenger side door of my wife's car. He sees me, quickly stands up and holds out his hands. It's like sign language. He's saying "don't get excited. I'm caught. I'm leaving now."

I am a Secret Service agent, waiting outside a hotel for the arrival of an important dignitary. I am providing covert security, dressed in plain clothes to blend in with the crowd. We all stand curbside, leaning into the street to see if the motorcade is approaching. I lift up the lapel of my overcoat and speak into a hidden microphone. Of course, this is noticed by at least one person in the crowd, so I realize I have blown my cover. I am no longer covert.

Then I am watching a movie -- and I am IN the movie. The protagonist (me) is a rich man in his mansion. I am in a smoking jacket, holding a drink in a highball glass. A bad guy has broken in. He is there to rob and kidnap me. But he does not manhandle me or tie me up. I am free to move about. So as we are standing together, I surreptitiously punch an emergency code into an alarm panel, a row of 4 round buttons set into a cut stone wall. The bad guy doesn't notice what I've done, nor is he alerted. This is a silent alarm.

Then we descend a set of ornate stairs. On a landing midway down the staircase there is a little table with a phone, which is ringing. I answer and as the person talks (I don't know what they are saying) I begin talking very fast.

"Call the police, I am being robbed," I say, then hang up.

The bad guy looks at me in disbelief, but I just laugh it off.

"It was just a recording," I say.

We walk a short distance on this lower floor, perhaps 20 feet, then he suddenly knocks me down and grabs me from behind. He is clearly unhappy about the phone incident. He wraps his legs around me, and I realize he is going to attempt anal sex. I cry out in panic.

"No, no! I have lots of money, we can buy you a beautiful woman!"

Then, like a movie, the scene cuts to a couple of English detectives, no doubt from Scotland Yard. Now I am only a viewer, and the rich man and bad guy are not present.

The detectives stand in front of a desk, which may be in their offices or somewhere else. One detective is showing evidence to the other. It is a crude drawing, black on white paper, almost like a woodcut. It is a list of items to take on a trip. The drawing depicts shorts and a T-shirt, surrounded by roughly a dozen objects that I as the viewer instantly recognize as condoms. I realize with horror that the bad guy has kidnapped the rich man and abducted him for some sort of cross-country sex trip in which he will use the condoms during his anal rape of the rich man.

The detectives don't understand this yet. They only know the rich man is missing. The accepted explanation is that he has left voluntarily with the bad guy on a trip, but they are still checking it out. The first detective tries to decipher the drawing.

"I believe it is a sort of sock that printers use to keep their ink pens in," he says.

He is groping about for the proper word, but it won't come to him.

Part of a group traveling on foot. We cross a park or open space, then I see -- as if watching a movie -- a railroad track in a sort of alley formed by industrial buildings. Rats are running everywhere, back and forth, side to side. They are different colors, some brown, some white and fluffy. They are more like clean stuffed animals than dirty rodents. Still, I think that I am glad it is only a movie. I am glad I am not walking through here. If we'd taken this route, I could not have gone. I could not have faced all of these rats.

Then the movie illusion is over, and we reach our destination, the outside of a library. I understand that we are visitors to this city. A woman in my group has played a highly visible, key role in a bond election and some other civic funding mechanism that will pay for some expansion or improvement of the library, maybe the Arts in general. But there is a problem. According to local news reports, if both of these funding mechanisms are passed it will overload the local taxing system. The project will not be realized.

So the woman must speak publicly, retracting her position so that the funding can be revised and the project will not fail. Then the group is gone, and I am alone with my sons.

My oldest is on foot, my youngest is wearing roller blades and I am on a Razor. We are on a sort of concrete drainage flume, about the width of a sidewalk. We follow its gently winding course down a long grade. I am going faster than the boys and even think to myself that I should slow down, set my pace to theirs. But I am enjoying the ride. And since the end of the path is not far and all of the path can be seen at once, I decide there is no risk of losing them. I will continue and simply wait for the boys at the bottom.

My wife and I are riding in a friend's car. We are in an amusement park (perhaps Six Flags), and the friend is trying to get back onto the main road. But she continues to miss the entrance ramp, instead following the ramps that take us onto the various rides. To keep us from becoming a part of the rides, she must either make a quick, sharp turn or -- in one case -- back up.

Watching a movie from within the movie. I am there, but apparently only as an observer. I play no role nor do I interact with anyone.

We are inside a huge building with a very high ceiling rising many stories above us. We are in some strange Muslim society. The women do not wear veils, and they appear to be in charge. I understand that the women, although subservient to Muslim men, are in control of some very specific but critical aspects of society. Women are in charge of this place, for instance.

It is a sort of courtroom, and a trial is under way. A man has been brought before the court. He is accused of committing some sin or insult against a woman. I sense that it is more of a cultural misstep than anything most Americans would think of as a crime. There are only three people: The defendant, the plaintiff and the judge. The plaintiff and the judge are both women.

The judge talks about this crime or sin, reciting what I understand is the official wording of such a proceeding. If the defendant man is judged guilty, then the punishment will be death. I do not hear the actual charge (or anything else that is said). When the time comes for the man to speak, he tells the plaintiff he is terribly sorry.

"Will you forgive me?" he asks.

"No."

His fate is sealed. This means he must die.

The condemned man is suspended from a sort of cable and hoisted high in the air. I assume he will be killed in the air or perhaps dropped to his death; I do not know the mode of execution. But after the man is raised, he is then partly lowered. And raised yet again. I sense that part of his punishment is to prolong death, a sort of psychological torture. In other words, his fate is "left hanging."

This is apparently more than the man can take, for he leaps from the cable to a catwalk. Suddenly I find myself on this catwalk, too. I now realize that the floor plan of the room is a giant circle, and various levels of catwalks ring the wall. The man tries to hide here, for now there are uniformed male guards or bailiffs hurrying about. They are carrying guns and wearing what look like football helmets. These men are in charge of enforcing the actions of the woman-controlled court.

There is a fire or explosion in front of the man, and everything is cloaked in smoke and shadow.

Then the air clears, and we see that the man now has a blackened face. Because of flying shrapnel from the explosion, he also has two bolts sticking out of his forehead. They look like devil horns. And I see something like long, pointy catfish whiskers on his head, swept back in place of what was his hair.

I know as I view this that it is intentional cinematic symbolism; the viewer is to understand that the man, by rejecting his justly imposed punishment, has been transformed into a personification of evil (i.e., Satan). This is the shadow made flesh.

The man speaks to someone, perhaps me.

"Tell my children that I am dead," he says.

Because he knows that the person he was is dead; he has been recreated by the fiery explosion. The men now hunt this devil in order to kill him and carry out the judgment of the court.

Then I realize the movie is actually my story. The demon man is really me.

At school, going over some material with a teacher or counselor. He is writing a number in a blank on a form, a score that relates to something I have already completed. But I don't have the material at hand and so I am trying to guess the number.

"I will have to get it for you later," I say.

Then I recall the number, though I immediately wonder if I have recalled it correctly.

Next, I am outside the old Woodacre Circle house. I see vandals and bad people milling about. Then I am in my bedroom. I must get dressed for school. I am trying to find the right clothes. This should not be a problem, but then I realize I can't seem to find a suitable pair of pants. Or a shirt. I look in the closet. I have perhaps two feet of rod space because my mother has absorbed the rest of the closet for storage. This is understandable, of course, because I haven't lived at home in years.

Meanwhile, I must gather other items to take to school. There is a box -- or maybe it's a notebook -- of my writings. It has a title on the spine, but I can't see what it is. These are rough, disjointed works of fiction that I will eventually rearrange and polish, much like my waking world creation, "Next Year at Marienbad." I see a woman, either a relative or friend of my mother. She makes some comment about having read my notes.

"They made no sense to me," she said. But she is pleasant enough about it, and I am not offended.

Then a group of perhaps a half dozen people -- children and adults -- come into my room. We visit a moment, but I must hustle them out for I have been eyeing my watch and realize I am running out of time. I gather up my work for school. But there is a problem: My backpack -- which contains the rest of my school work -- is at my apartment in Fort Worth, the one I lived in when I was in my 20s. I wonder if I will have time to go there before classes. I think about skipping my first class, but this is Duncanville High School. I will be in big trouble if I miss the first class. Plus it is a math class, which I cannot afford to miss.

I also want to take some music to listen to, but I soon realize all of my CDs are at my apartment. (CDs had not yet been invented when I still lived here.)

But I do find a couple of cassette players. I open a drawer and, incredibly, music is coming out. I am amazed that these units have been left on all these years and still continue to play. The batteries must be very good.

Driving with the boys on a trip. I'm not sure if we reach our ultimate destination; however, we are out of the car. We need to get back home, but there are many people who are also trying to make the return journey. I realize I no longer have a car.

So I put the boys in a sort of open air bus. This bus is small and crowded. There is no room for me. Instead of pulling the boys off the bus, though, I decide to send them without me. I will walk back, a long trip for me but doable. It would be unacceptably long for the boys. I tell the driver or perhaps another adult to make sure the boys get to my aunt's house in Waco. I test the boys.

"Do you know her name?"

"Leena," they answer.

"Yes, but you must remember the last name, too. Cherritt. That is where you are going."

Then I find myself looking at a body of water, perhaps from the shore or maybe on TV. I see a school of what I think are otters, swimming together on the surface of the water. But they don't look like otters. The faces seem to have mammalian features, but the back half is more like a giant tadpole.

Now I am inside a house, where someone has placed a large specimen of this strange animal on the table. They are pointing out various anatomical features and describing them in biological terms. This person uses a term I can't recall to describe a long, flowing fin-like structure on both sides of the face near the mouth. I do know that this term means that the appendage only moves in response to the flow of water; it has no power of its own. He moves on to the mouth, and I am afraid of being injured by giant teeth. But I see that the animal has no teeth. It is really a sort of amphibian, large but quite harmless. It is a relative of the salamander.

As I realize the animal poses no danger, it also occurs to me it needs to be in the water. It is growing weak, dying. I mention this, but no one else in the house can leave.

“Then I will take it back to the lake,” I say.

The lake is only a short distance away. Someone -- maybe me -- has a misting bottle filled with water. I use it to spray the animal, to keep it alive until we reach the lake.

In a car traveling a street. We go past some old houses that have been remodeled for commercial use, namely offices. Then we reach a cross street, a divided boulevard with giant oaks and pines in the median. I think to myself that I like the pines, but they are hard to grow here. This is really more like Nacogdoches in east Texas, the road to the Land of the Dead. We turn right.

Then I am in a hotel common area, perhaps the club room. It is paneled in rich wood like you'd have seen in the 1950s or early 1960s. It is early, and I have the room to myself. I have a small boom box – brown like the walls – that I have plugged in and am playing. The size and shape reminds me of a brown plastic cassette carrier I bought in junior high school. I have two other items, a notebook or book and something else I can't recall.

At this point, I notice that employees of the hotel are having a meeting at a nearby table. So I decide to put away the boom box. I unplug the power cord and coil it up. It stashes in a storage space in the back of the unit.

Then I am outside again, this time at my college dormitory in Nacogdoches. I am dealing with two service people (from either the telephone or electric companies). One of them is confused by a mix of names – mine as well as my roommate. Two people, yet one customer.

“This makes no sense,” he says. “You should get this straightened out. It is too confusing.”

I am at some sort of business conference. I arrive just as a woman finishes discussing software that will run on one of my vintage computers, either the Tandy Model 100 (the one I use every morning to record my dreams) or the Epson HX-20 (the one I burned out with an incompatible power adapter). So I go up to her afterwards to get details. I think one of the programs is a game. But I am not sure.

Then I am on the phone with the president of my company, trying to explain some story I am working on. I am not making much sense, so he suggests we have lunch the next day.

This reasonable approach to life does not last. I encounter a crazy person, acting insane and scaring people. Or maybe the crazy person is me.

I find myself walking away from Duncanville High School, heading east on Camp Wisdom Road. The idea pops into my head of a “latent psychosis,” and suddenly I decide to terrorize an older couple in a car that is traveling in the same direction.

I jump on their car, acting like a monster. But the people recognize me, perhaps from the earlier part of the dream or maybe they just know me.

“I am sorry,” I tell them.

Fortunately, they let me off with only a warning. I start walking back towards the school, except I am really heading toward home. I am now in downtown Fort Worth, walking around the block that contains the Tarrant County Register. I am in pajamas, robe and slippers. I should be sleeping – it is midnight or 1 a.m., yet it is daylight outside. As I reach the third side of the block (the south side I think) I encounter two kids. They act like kids, but they are really more like adults. They are adult size. Man-kids.

One of the men has a bike, which he uses to block my way. The other man is perhaps 20 feet behind me. We are in a small parking lot, consisting of no more than one quarter of the block. I realize I have lost one of my slippers, and one of the man-kids picks it up and throws it to his friend. They are laughing, playing keep away. Somehow I push the bike into the nearest man-kid and manage to catch the slipper. I take off running, yelling for help as I go.

There are two people who see and hear me. One is a man with an ax, the kind that firefighters use. I cross the street and head for the sidewalk, which is covered in scaffolding, the kind often seen in cities when construction workers are busy on the façade of a building. The man with the ax hears me and seems ready to intervene, but I don't even stop to tell him the problem. I simply want to get home and call the police. Besides, I am sure the man sees the two man-kids chasing me and will recognize the problem without my explaining it.

After I wake up and am trying to go back to sleep, I see a demonic spirit – in the form of a curl of smoke, like in a medieval woodcut – descending into my Model 100. Terrified, I wake myself, stopping this image.

My wife and I are cleaning out a large closet in our home. I am thinking about all of the junk, secretly blaming her for keeping all of those useless items. But we have been working hard. The closet is virtually empty. It occurs to me that we will put only a few items back in the closet. Mostly, it will remain empty. Then I bring in a paper grocery sack containing various, unknown items. I look at it, sitting on the floor, and think that perhaps even this is junk. Maybe we don't need anything.

I look around and realize that my wife is turning the closet into a living room. There is new furniture, and a sort of Frank Lloyd Wright-style fireplace mantle. It is unlike anything I have ever seen. The wood has a medium dark stain, and the upper part of it consists of strips of wood, like a patio sun screen. So it is that this forgotten storage area has been transformed into an appealing living space.

My father and I are cross a bridge over a lake, apparently Toledo Bend Reservoir. But I'm heading in the wrong direction! I am traveling into Texas, away from the Land of the Dead.

We arrive at a sort of crossroads community, a collection of commercial buildings. It is really more of a retail center than a true town. Strangely, we don't have a car. How did we get this far anyway? So we are to take a bus. Our destination is Granbury, Texas, which is half a state away. Of course, this will be a long trip. It occurs to me that I have no money, so I am glad to be here with dad. He can advance me any funds I may need. We check into buying tickets in a place that looks like a telegraph office.

Then we go outside and cross the street to a store, where we will each get a soft drink for our trip. I also think that I would like to have a book for the trip. I am taking a class and need to study, but I don't have my books with me. I'll need something to pass the time. Then we notice the time.

“The bus leaves in 15 minutes,” dad says.

He is pessimistic that we will be able to get our drinks before we must board the bus.

Five months after the “Nightmare Before Christmas” dream that begins this videotape, I find myself enjoying Christmas Eve with my family. And yet enjoying is not quite the right word. For I am saddened by the evening news, a story about a lost boy presumed drowned at Possum Kingdom Lake, about two hours west of Strangers Rest.

His father, who is legally blind, speaks to the rescuers, thanking them for all they have done. The search involved roughly 200 to 300 volunteers, who combed the shoreline and surrounding wilderness for two cold, miserable days. Then we go to the 7 p.m. Christmas Eve service at church.

The pastor tells a story of the daughter of the innkeeper who turned away Mary and Joseph. She was sick, but the proximity of the Christ child heals her. He says that we must hold the Christ child next to our hearts, to heal ourselves.

We leave the church, but there is a minor family spat – someone is unhappy (perhaps me) about something vague and unimportant. We drive around looking at Christmas lights, but I do not feel festive. The lights give off a horrid glow. I am drowning.

That night I dream I am standing in a lake, water up to my waist. There is a motor boat slowly turning from side to side, towing a baby in a small inflatable. I am staying within arms reach of the baby, watching the rope as it curves around when the boat turns. Then I realize the baby is gone. It has fallen out, and I can't find it. It must have sunk.

I am frantically searching, then I stand next to the shore and call for everyone (there is a picnic, many people are playing ball) to jump in.

"Don't worry about a swim suit," I say. "Get in in your clothes."

We all spread out, walking across the lake bottom in hopes of finding the baby, before it's too late. I come to a place where the waters have receded, leaving the muddy, dead bottom. There is a tarp or covering of some sort. I lift it up and find a man and woman. The woman is dark skinned; I do not notice the man. She smiles at me. There are people all around. I realize we have stumbled upon this couple in some sort of compromising position, something sexual.

Then I am inside a nearby building or home, and a couple of people are at a dining table. The baby is still on my mind. Did we find it? Is it OK? I am not sure. What happened to the Christ child?

I know exactly what happened. I read it in "El Bib":

Now the ascension of Jesus the Messiah into Heaven took place in this way. While his disciples were talking about the many great deeds and miracles they had observed Jesus perform on the road, the Holy Spirit transformed the Son of the Deity into an infant. This took place to fulfill what had been spoken by the Lord through the prophet: "'Look, the disciples shall behold the Son of the Deity, and they shall name him Emmanuel,' which means 'God is with us.'" They took the baby Jesus to the town of Bethlehem, where they left him in a manger with Mary and her husband Joseph. They were preparing to celebrate their wedding night, but agreed to take the child. When they went to sleep Mary laid down with the baby, and the Holy Spirit implanted the child in her womb. When they awoke Joseph saw that the baby was now in the belly of his bride, whom he had believed to be a virgin. Being a righteous man and unwilling to expose her to public disgrace, he planned to dismiss her quietly. But just when he had resolved to do this, an angel of the Lord appeared to him in a dream and said "Joseph, son of David, do not be afraid to keep Mary as your wife, for the child conceived in her is from the Holy Spirit. He will save his people from their sins." Nine months later, the Holy Spirit caused the embryo to withdraw from Mary and the spirit of Jesus was carried up into Heaven. And Mary and Joseph worshipped him, and returned to their home with great joy; and they were continually in the temple blessing God.

Six nights after Christmas, and the water is a river. Am I on the shore or in a boat? I am not sure.

There is a boat – a barge. It appears to have lost power and is drifting dangerously close to the concrete pilings of a bridge. I am with another man, a ship captain or some sort of modern mariner. He tells me of a time when he was on a ship that had lost its power. I do not listen closely for I am busy imagining the barge being swept along by the river current, then slammed against the pilings. He says something about the lower Hudson River and "nothing below us but the Falls." At the time I assume he is talking about Niagra Falls, but realize later that the geography is incorrect. Then we turn away from the river and walk up a low, paved grade.

The river banks are decorated in Christmas lights, and the whole scene reminds me of the Cane River in Natchitoches, La. (the start of the El Camino Real).

"I meant to come before Christmas was over," the man says.

"Anymore there is some celebration going on here year 'round," I say.

Because this is not just a river, but the Sundance Square retail development in downtown Fort Worth.

We turn right, walking over the brick pavers. We approach the Tarrant County Register, a geographical reference point which puts this river in about the location of Burnett Plaza. There should be no river in this place, but I do not realize that until later. I am preoccupied, looking at the bricks underfoot. They have been laid out in patterns – some herringbone, some linear. I see a sort of ragged line, as if the bricks were actually concrete and someone had dragged something through it while the cement was still wet. This is ghostly to me, and it makes me recall a story I've heard of a ghost.

Then I see that the mariner is actually Kit Genelli, and I tell him that his wife told me the story of the ghost. I can't recall his wife's name, which is embarrassing (I've known her longer than my own wife), so I cover up by saying "your then wife-to-be."

"Years ago – I can't recall the precise number, but it was 10, 12 or maybe 13 years – she told me this story," I say.

I didn't believe the story, but I wish to recount it in a way that does not insult her. So I explain that I simply accepted her account as one of those unexplainable stories. Kit has no comment.

Now we have rounded the corner of the Register building and are walking north on the side street, between the building and the Fort Worth Club. I try to recall the name of the ghost. Was it Blackbeard? No, then I remember: Bluebeard.

New Years Eve. Another Duncanville High School dream. This time, though, the details mostly fade upon waking.

I am with another person, perhaps several. We have a class, but it is still early. So we cross the indoor commons area and head to the southeast part of original complex. There is a café, and we take a seat in a booth. But we are now running late. Time to go to class.

Did I forget to bring textbooks? I'm not sure. As we leave, the hostess takes an electronic photo of each of us, a souvenir. I can see myself in the digital display, which faces forward toward the photo subject. I am wearing a broad brimmed hat, a bit like Indiana Jones or some 1930s detective. I am dressed for adventure.

On the top of a stepladder in a carport connected to an open garage. Several people are standing around, milling about. There are boxes and other materials stacked around us. Clearly this carport is used more as a shed; there is no room for appliances.

I look down into the garage and see a rat. Then several more appear. But one of the rats looks different from the others. It's the same brown color, but its ears stand up. And the tail – suddenly, I realize it is a bunny.

I must do something about the rats. I see one at the bottom of the ladder. I leap down, intending to land on it and deliver a squashing blow. But I miss, and the rats come after me.

Then one of the bystanders suddenly grabs me and ignites my rocket engine.

Yes, it seems that I am a sort of living rocket! I know that this bystander just wants to have a little fun, travel a few feet and land in the yard next to the carport. But I decide to administer a well-earned scare. I give myself full power, hands extended like guidance fins. I streak into the sky. My passenger tries to pull me back to earth, but it is a hopeless cause. The thrust takes us hundreds of feet in the air. Then we descend, landing in a nearby pasture.

Driving on an interstate that runs alongside a large downtown. On the first leg of the trip I am taking side streets, trying to regain the highway. Eventually I reach my destination, but I do not recall the details or anything that happened there.

Then I am on the interstate again, going home. I am frustrated because there is a lot of traffic and I will be late. It is about 1 p.m., still hours before I am supposed to return. But the trip is a long one, several hours. I can see already that if the traffic remains this thick I will be late. At one point I have my eyes closed, just trying to force my way through the appliances. I hit a rough patch of pavement, which sets me bouncing in my seat. I fear I will strike the inside guardrail. I don't, but I find myself traveling in the wrong lane. I am exiting the interstate, again lost in downtown. I must find a way back onto the highway. I must continue the journey.

At First United Methodist Church of Strangers Rest. It is the first of the year, and it announced that two dozen members have started out the new year by giving at least $1,000 to the church. I'm very happy; we are among them. I know now that we are among the elite. Better than most. Then they say something about several who gave large amounts -- $20,000 to $50,000. Then I am humbled. This is good, for humility paves the way.

And now I have arrived.

I am in Granny and Paw's house in Fort Jesup. This is the epicenter of the Land of the Dead.

My grandparents have been dead for years now, but the house lives on without them. It has grown larger, deeper. No doubt a necessary expansion, one required to hold all of the memories of 140 years of Leaches in Sabine Parish.

I see an old woman's face in a moth-eaten mirror. Plump faced, white-haired, a laughing ghost. She looks a bit like an aunt of mine, a woman who is still alive. Terrified, I run to middle room in the front of the house. This should be the bathroom, but it has reverted to the bedroom it was before the house was plumbed in the 1960s.

Within these chalky, beaded board walls there is a bed and a woman. She is a relative of some sort who is now the house's caretaker, a sort of landlady of the dead. I apologize for bursting in. I am supposed to sleep in the adjoining room. We talk a bit, then I go to my room.

This should be the living room, but when I step through the door I find a screened-in porch. It is run down, wood rotting, Southern decay. I look out through sagging screen and see a black car leaving my uncle's double wide next door. It looks like a charcoal drawing or woodcut of an old car from the late '50s, sporting fins that suggest a Thunderbird or Galaxie 500. Black as night, it reminds me of a winged demon.

This is a car of death.

Perhaps the car was actually a classic Caddy. This would further link "The Shadow Made Flesh" to the government/alien conspiracy. Why? Because Men in Black are often reported to be driving antiquated black Cadillacs, vehicles that inexplicably "seem and smell brand new," according to the Men in Black entry at Wikipedia.org.

Personally, I believe the Men in Black are actually human/alien hybrids employed by the federal government under protocols of Majestic 12, the commission of scientists, military leaders and government officials formed in 1947 by a presidential order from Harry S. Truman. Here is the famous letter:

TOP SECRET - EYES ONLY

THE WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON

September 24, 1947.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE SECRETARY OF DEFENSE

Dear Secretary Forrestal:

As per our recent conversation on this matter, you are hereby authorized to proceed with all due speed and caution upon your undertaking. Hereafter this matter shall be referred to only as Operation Majestic Twelve.

It continues to be my feeling that any future considerations relative to the ultimate disposition of this matter should rest solely with the Office of the President following appropriate discussions with yourself, Dr. Bush and the Director of Central Intelligence.

MJ-12's efforts continue to this day. Do you know that Texas billionaire with electronic eyes is a member? That's right, Dollar Bill Buckstop. I have it on good authority that it was through his MJ-12 connections that he came to meet and employ Adolfo Morel, a shadowy figure associated with a cacophony of incomprehensible voices and various government/alien conspiracies, including Watergate and the Kennedy assassination (because JFK wanted to end the cover-up). Buckstop and Morel are major world power brokers who manipulate events behind the scenes in a bid for total world domination, specifically through the introduction of psychotropic compounds into the global water supply and a stock market-manipulated takeover of the Exogrid. (Ironically, it is possible they were reprogrammed by an alien computer found in a South American cave where Nazis holed up after WWII, with the cryogenically frozen Hitler, $200 billion in gold bullion and an Aerial Clock they'd brought down with a V-2 rocket during the final days of the war.

So there it is. What more proof do you need of the ongoing government cover up of the existence of UFOs?

The third and final section of "The Stranger Made Flesh" begins with disjointed recollections... At a men's party -- maybe a bachelor's party. Jack Bryson is there. There is a buffet line and a bar. We may enjoy brandy and cigars, though I am not sure... At a scout camp, in a tent. One of the district leaders comes up, asking about a sign we have posted in our campsite.

"It could be seen as offensive to Jews," he tells me.

"I don't know anything about this sign, but I will take care of it."

I walk around the campsite, but I do not find the suspect sign. I am wondering if we will have any visitors today. I told several friends to come out for the day; I'd buy them a beer. But no one is here, so I eat lunch alone.

Then I realize the boys have been in classes all morning. They missed lunch. I must find them and make sure they eat and are all right. I go to a mess hall, and I find that the boys are all fine. They have eaten; they don't need me. So I head back to camp. I walk through a school, past a gym and down a hall. I am with Scott Paulson (or some other high school athlete) for part of the walk. A coach is in his office as I walk past. Then I go up a set of stairs. They are old, like in Dallas Hall at SMU. Now I am watching someone else who is also me. He has made some sort of salary deal in which he gets some of his retirement money now, allowing him to invest in a way that will get him more money when he actually retires. This strikes me as a nice deal, the sort that might be offered to executives.

Visiting the lake, standing at the water end of my uncle's house trailer. I am slipping out a stiff piece of meshing -- roughly 2 by 10 inches -- from a sort of open envelop affixed to the trailer. Then my uncle calls out to me. He is on the side of the trailer with the front door, standing on a ladder and plastering over the metal siding. The plaster has paint in it, making this a one-step project. He tells me I should look at something, but I'm can't remember what.

A family in a car pulls into our garage. We tell them to leave and, unsatisfied with the pace of their departure, we call the police.

I walk next door to a car dealership. When I try to return to my house, though, I can't get out. An event related to the Fort Worth Stock Show -- something involving kids, but no animals -- is going on in what appears to be the lobby of the dealership. We can't go through here to get home, so we must wait or go a different direction. Someone who works at the dealership makes a comment about the police being called to the “house next door.” They think this was too harsh.

“Just give the people a chance to leave on their own, without police trouble” one of them says.

They don’t know who I am, don’t realize that I am the one who lives there and summoned the police.

Wearing a dress shirt and tie, I am resting in my car inside a parking garage. I must take a test in one hour. Then Glenda Roburn (a friend from church and Cub Scouts) sees me and stops to say hello. Then I realize it’s time to go. I drive away, with her as my passenger – no wait, I am the passenger.

Suddenly I realize that I have left my dress shoes and socks at home. How can I go barefoot to the test? I realize that the only way I can look right is to go for a casual look. I must take off my tie and put on a pair of tennis shoes, which I have in the car.

I am watching a movie, but I’m in the movie, too. The scene involves dangerous men, bad guys. I am there with a girl. We are all inside a gas station. The woman who owns it is involved with someone’s boyfriend. Details are unclear, but it’s clearly sexual. The bad guys like this.

There is red graffiti on the walls, like cave drawings. One of the pictures makes me think of some piece of primitive phallic art.

I identify the bad guys as a threat to the girl. We have a discussion in which I point out to them the potential for police involvement. But I tell them not to worry about the girl. She’ll be no problem for them.

“If necessary, I’ll cut off her head,” I say.

This satisfies the bad guys, who immediately leave. But the girl is not happy about the decapitation talk.

“I’m sorry if it disturbed you,” I say, explaining that it was just my attempt to identify with – and thereby protect us from – the bad men.

“That’s the way you have to deal with these Dionysian cults,” I say.

#

A trip to Six Flags. But it has changed since my last visit. Now it is mostly stores, women’s clothing and accessories. This is terrible.

Inside my old boyhood house on Cherry Street in Duncanville. It is night, and there is someone outside. They have made no threats, yet I am frightened. I decide to call the police. I go to the entry hall, where the old black dial phone still sits on the gossip bench, just like in my childhood. I realize that I can’t dial 9-11 because we are back in the 1960s or early 1970s (we moved out of this house in 1972). So I dial “0” for operator. But there is no answer. Then I check the sticker under the handset. Sure enough, it has the number for the police department. Strangely, it’s only a five-digit number. I dial it, but again no answer. Of course, I realize later that a five-digit phone number makes sense. Because in those days, the local exchange started with two “letters.” Ours was “AX.” Our number was Axle 8 plus the last four numbers.

Now I have returned to the present, my home in Strangers Rest. But something has been added; we have a carport in front. My wife and I are outside. We see two teenage girls walk past the front of the house, then sit down on the north edge of our front lawn, as if they are sitting down for a picnic. We have a cake in the carport, which I offer to them. But they are suspicious. They see that it has been sitting outside. Is it still good?

In my old bedroom at Woodacre Circle. There is a skunk trapped in my closet. I keep the door closed because I don’t want the skunk to get loose inside the house. But how did it get in my closet? I don’t know. There are others here, friends I suppose. We must be planning to go somewhere. But I can’t get any clothes out of the closet. So far, there is no scent from the skunk. But it occurs to me that if it starts spraying, then all my clothes will be ruined.

We have recently purchased an old house, which we will restore for our new home. It appears to be from the 1930s, a rather plain example of Tudor style. The house is uphill from the road, and the narrow driveway – just one car wide – lies along the right side of the house. On the other side of the drive, just past the house, is a freestanding garage. But there is no access to this garage from the driveway. Not much landscaping here. No shade trees, just a large planting bed that encompasses most of a slope at the back of the house.

I go to a restaurant, where I am to meet my wife. I am seated and brought a drink, but still she does not show. I begin to worry that perhaps she doesn’t know to come. Then I run into a friend who is here for a business meal with a journalist from some trade publication. The journalist is out of the room, so we are not introduced. When he returns to the table, he does not know that I am a daily newspaper reporter, sitting within earshot. I listen to everything, marveling that if anything newsworthy is discussed I will be able to beat this reporter to print.

Then I am outside behind the restaurant, at the rear entrance. There is a set of three or four steps of open construction (no risers), revealing a sort of exposed cistern below. I slide a dead man into the water.

Am I the one who killed him? I am not sure, though it is clear that by disposing of the body I am an accessory. I watch the body sink feet first into the water, which appears to be lit from within. This water is white – as if watered down milk – but clear enough that I can see the dead man for several feet before he fades from sight. I throw gold into this cistern, too. Somehow the gold is associated with the man. It occurs to me that the body will eventually float back to the surface. But when the police come to investigate, they will not know to look in the bottom. They probably won’t find the gold, which means I can later retrieve the treasure.

Then I realize that the cistern is just a glass jar.

I pick it up, and through the milky water I see there are jagged pieces of glass or maybe metal in the bottom of the jar. No gold, no little corpse.

I return to my house. In the back yard I see a Suburban, and a woman is sitting at the wheel. She is waiting for me. I somehow know she is associated with the dead man. In fact, she is supposed to be dead, too. But she is alive. I suspect that she is really the walking dead. She is angry, here to confront me.

Did I kill her? Were we sexually involved? If so, this could be doubly bad for me. Trouble with the police and my wife.

I am substituting as an elementary school teacher in Fort Worth. The school is at the Rivercrest Country Club. I am walking north across the street from the golf course. I am pretending to ride a motorcycle, holding a set of handlebars in front of me. I should be walking past house, but instead I find myself outside a public library. People are coming out the front door, both children and a few adults. They are teachers and students, and we are all walking together back to the school.

As we cross the fairway, I am talking with some of the kids, my students. We reach the main building, but it is not yet time for class. I walk through it to the far end, where I can look out past a balcony onto the golf course. No one is here, so I walk to an adjoining room full of teachers.

One of the teachers tells me there may be trouble with me teaching.

“There is a rule that prohibits teachers from being involved in literary activities,” she explains.

“That could be a problem,” I agree..

And in fact, I am now having misgivings about teaching the class -- not just because I want to write a book. The first day had gone well, but it was because I was carrying out a lesson plan developed by the previous teacher. Now it is day two, and I realize that in a few minutes I must go into the classroom without any lessons or activities planned. What am I going to do?

I sit down in a small cafeteria or lounge and have a Coke with my sons. Then it is time to go to my class. I decide to stop off in the restroom first. I see the "mens" sign on the door and enter. But inside, I find there are rows of counters and men and women. A singles bar. I immediately realize this is not real. I am in a dream. But this is not a lucid dream, because I am not thinking right.

For instance, I apparently do not realize I am married because I decide to see if I can meet a woman. I push through the crowd, past a man and his son, then come to a woman in a gray cotton or linen outfit, a skirt with matching top designed to look as if it is one piece. She looks to be in her early 20s, pretty but by no means a knock out. She has dark brown, straight hair parted in the middle. I approach her, but misjudge the distance and bump into her. I feel her breasts, and I realize she is not wearing a bra. She looks startled, of course.

"Do you want to trade clothes?" I ask, handling the cloth of her top.

"No!" she says, wide eyed and laughing.

"Do you want to have sex?"

She does not appreciate my little joke.

"No," she says firmly.

So I begin to look around the room, for another woman to approach. But the woman who has turned me down has not forgotten me.

"That's not the way to talk to a woman," she says. She is right, of course, but I have lost interest in her. I look out the window, watching appliances traveling on a city street. I should not be here, teaching. I must continue on the road home.

Then I look again at the woman's face, and the world goes white.

Outside at night, walking with a group of people I know. We come to a pile of refuse – trash, dirt and other discards. And yet, the items are apparently significant. To this pile I add an antique metal advertising sign, which employs an image of the devil. I put dirt on top of the sign, burying it in a shallow grave.

Then I am inside my old apartment in Fort Worth, the one I lived in before getting married. It is still my home, but I am being held here against my will by a sort of mad scientist. Another man is also being held here. We are to be his guinea pigs, the subject of his experiments.

The scientist has an assistant, an attractive woman who appears to be in her 20s or early 30s. She is wearing a grayish or maybe tan suit, the kind with a skirt and jacket, but no blouse. I can see down the front of the jacket. She has smallish breasts, but still a definite sexual presence.

The woman produces some papers, computer bubble sheets. I realize she is preparing to give me a personality test.

"Have you ever taken one before?" she asks.

"Yes," I say, but I can't remember when or the results. So she consults a chart in which she points to an entry with the name of the tester (MacKensie) and the date. It is a "9" followed by some single digit date that I don't see.

"I don't remember the name of the person who administered the test, but this entry could be the one," I say.

Meanwhile, the scientist is talking to the other man. I realize that the experiment is being readied. Somehow I know that we are to undergo some sort of physical transformation. We will be turned into new beings, a frightening prospect. The assistant asks me about a small bottle of model airplane paint she has found in the apartment.

"Can we use it?" she asks.

I examine it and shake my head.

"It is too old," I say. "Look, the pigment has settled in the bottom of the bottle and can't be re-mixed."

So I hold the bottle in front of me, moving toward the kitchen as if to throw it in the trash. I act casual, do a little skip-and-slide walk to the kitchen. Of course, I am hoping to make an escape. Do they suspect this? Will they stop me?

No, they make no move toward me. I go to the far end of the kitchen, where there is a door that leads to a bedroom and, beyond that, to the balcony and freedom. I bolt for the balcony, which is on the second or third floor (looks very much like the balcony of my apartment in the "Silver Jesus" dream.)

I run outside and start yelling for help.

"There's a burglar, I'm being kidnapped!"

I kick away a screen and jump to a flat roof just below me. I yell to a man on the ground below, but I don't stop running. I know the scientist and his assistant could be right behind me, ready to recapture me and perform the transformation.

I run over to the edge of the roof and jump or climb to the ground. I run back inside the building, into the lobby, yelling all the while about the kidnappers. Apparently, word has already reached the authorities, because I find several uniformed officers already waiting. They direct me to a seat; I am saved.

Several months later, I find myself in a bedroom with the scientist and his assistance. I am standing and they are in the bed.

"I'm happy you were not sent to jail," I tell them. I can afford to be charitable. They will be on probation for a long time, so they will have to be careful not to commit any more crimes. They are no longer a threat.

"I'm happy because I will be able to spend time with you and not worry," I add.

I am again holding the metal sign of the devil. I place it on top of the covers where they will sleep.

In the Duncanville High School cafeteria, eating lunch. There are several people at my table, and I am interested in one of the girls. But it occurs to me that she is not particularly interested in me. Maybe I will find someone else who really does like me, and then I will see what a difference it makes. As I think this over, it is like I am no longer a student but once again my 40-year-old self.

We are now outside and one of the people in our group becomes intoxicated. He is unconscious. We must somehow pick him up, move him back to the cafeteria. We gather up our belongings and prepare to leave. Lunch time is over.

Then I am inside a house with my parents. They sit or relax on a bed in the living room, which reminds me of my great grandmother's home in Waco. I go to my bedroom, look at myself in the mirror. I am a cartoon character, with bushy hair parted in the middle, big pink lips and a very skinny neck. I think to myself that this is my true appearance. I must face the facts: It will be hard to find an attractive girl (like the one at my lunch table) who will be interested in me.

I return to the living room to talk with my parents. Again, I go to the mirror. I still have longish hair parted in the middle, but now my face is more normal. I decide I no longer look so strange.

More talk with my parents. One of them mentions the word "ghost." I am not sure of the context. I look in the mirror a third time. Now there is a normal man, but he is not me. And upon further reflection, I decided he is not quite normal after all, for he is menacing and almost demonic. I am terrified. I tell my parents about this.

"You cannot talk about ghosts in front of me anymore," I say. "It is too suggestive, conjuring up evil spirits."

I tell them about a theory that writers have autonomous spirits within them. This is all psychological, of course, symbolic – not actual spirits. But it is important.

"This is the way they are able to write," I say.

My parents are concerned by this talk.

"We can get you to a doctor, a good one," my mother says. "It won't be like the ones you might encounter during an emergency room visit."

This doctor will be the best.

“We use Simon & Schuster,” she adds.

Next, I am reading a catalog. I look at a chart, which is almost like a game board. It is on paper, yet you can manipulate the drawings as if it were a computer screen. You can make the vehicles in the picture move. So I make some sort of submarine go to the bottom of a body of water, a lake or ocean. Then I flip to a different page and see a picture of self-contained living quarters for undersea use. It looks like a normal living room, complete with sofa and coffee table.

On College Street in Strangers Rest. I see that they are demolishing the old brick house next to the winery, which is a converted church. This is a house my wife and I have always liked and used to hope it would go on the market. So its destruction is sad.

I don't know why it is being torn down because the house appeared to be in good shape. Even now, the exposed frame looks almost new.

Then I see that the house is gone. It has been razed to the ground, nothing left. I realize that I have bought it anyway. I am using the site to construct a walkway, a winding paved path labeled like a game board. This walkway encompasses the old cement walks of the demolished house. The walkway will pass by the side of the winery but it really goes no where; it just makes a loop. It occurs to me that what I have envisioned is a sort of park. And like a park it really should be open to the public. Free. So I must come up with a way to make money from services I provide to those who travel my pathway.

Next my project is apparently completed and open to the public. I am on the walkway, helping a mother and daughter figure out how to wear the sash on a Girl Scout uniform. (I know nothing of such things, but realize I can go on the Internet to do the research).

Then I am reading a newsletter from the First United Methodist Church in Strangers Rest. It is about the size and shape of a sheet of copy paper folded in half. The layout is similar to our existing weekly bulletin, but with a more modular design. I see on the cover that it says "baptist." Someone explains that the newsletter was produced by two people from a baptist church.

“This is a just test product for us,” they say. “However, we may decide to adopt it as our own.”

I am on the walkway again, writing my stories. I compose an opening line:

"He heard the voices of angels."

Then I have a revelation. I change it:

"He heard the voice of god."

Excited, I continue writing.

"He knew not to talk about the voice. So instead he wrote stories about strange happenings, which he knew was an acceptable theme for fiction."

I realize I finally have the book I should write. I see that I can include some short stories I have already written. It can all be included in a structure that deals with the theme of my hearing the voice of god. I even think of a cover picture, a Medieval painting of a haloed Christ framed by parted clouds. I have finally seen the truth behind my dreams. And that is what will make the difference. I heard the voice of god. This is the revelation that will make me a successful writer. This is my destiny.

I am in space. I see the heavens, the stars. There is a planet with a ring, and both are made up of many tiny stars or perhaps pinpoints of light. A beautiful view – but I'm not home yet.

After a car trip of undetermined nature, I arrive at a church in Oak Cliff. I am looking for my children. I go into the sanctuary, where I am to attend a wedding. I see one of my cousins and her husband. They are excited to see me; we have a group hug.

I am at a table, sitting with my wife and perhaps another couple. We are eating. Then I notice the wall to my right is gone, revealing the sanctuary. A service is in progress. I assume it is some sort of orthodox ceremony, for there is a man in priest-like clothing carrying a smoking incense burner at the end of a chain. This is a sacred ceremony. I realize we should not be eating.

Next I am in my car, leaving the church. It is night, and I have lost my way. I determine that to get home to Strangers Rest I must first drive in the opposite direction, to Duncanville. Because I know how to get there – and, in turn, home.

I am traveling south on Cedar Ridge Road, stopped at a signal light that has been installed at the road that leads to the Camp Wisdom Boy Scout property. On my left I see that a big, new house sits on the corner. I am waiting for the light to turn, but I'm out of my lane, on the wrong side of the road, at the very corner where the house sits. I keep waiting, but the light is still red. Did I miss a cycle?

Then the car is filled with a flashing red light. A police car has pulled up behind me. I am blinded by the light. This is trouble. I know when the officer comes to my window, he will realize I have been drinking. I will be arrested.

In a classroom like a church, with long wooden pews. This classroom somehow reminds me of my grandparent's house in Fort Jesup, so it is in a sense a return visit to the Land of the Dead.

I am taking a math course, and we are preparing for the final exam – the only grade for the course. The test will be administered in a couple of hours. To help us prepare, the teacher is showing us a series of instructional videos. I watch part of one, but quickly grow disenchanted. It is mostly dramatic, full of plot and characterization, which is used to set up examples for the math. But the set ups take all the time; little attention is paid to the actual equations. I determine this is not the most efficient way to study for the test.

Also, I and others are supposed to leave immediately after the test on a long trip. Somehow we are at Cedar Creek Lake, for I am thinking about making the half hour drive to Kaufman for gas. I have my things piled up on the pew, and I try to group them together and keep them separate from those of the person who sits next to me. I make sure I do not crowd out the person – or get crowded out myself.

Then I am with my wife and we are trying to get the boys' race appliances finished for the Pinewood Derby, which is that day. The race may have replaced the math test, though I am not sure. I seem to recall that I told my parents we would pay for the derby appliances with money we would receive for having our noses cut off.

Of course, I realize we are not going to do this, but I am surprised that my parents have not objected. They seem OK with this. In fact, I can imagine them saying later “But I thought you were going to have your noses cut off.” I wonder if they have been unconcerned because they think I am bluffing, hoping they will be so troubled that they will give me the money. But it occurs to me that this is not the way they are. If they thought money was the issue, they would simply give it to us.

We are outside the classroom now, dealing with the derby appliances. Someone holds up a mangled car that is on the hook of a fishing pole. This is my youngest son's car. We are not concerned, though. There is also a carved and painted wooden figure, which will be incorporated into his completed car. This figure will lie on its back on the top of the car, which will travel feet first down the track. He is a dead man riding in a car coffin.

Only vague, incomplete recollections now ... It is dusk or perhaps already night. I am outside with my family, in a big field which reminds me of the pasture near Granbury where I saw a Civil War reenactment. My wife is sitting in a chair at the edge of the wooded area beyond the field of battle. In this area there is a skunk.

Fred the dog sees the skunk and chases it. The skunk does not spray us; we only smell a hint of its scent.

I think I see an owl on a knee high stick in the woods, but as I approach I realize it is the top of a sprinkler. We are at the edge of someone's front yard. The sprinklers are going, watering the lawn. Then we are on the front steps of a house. There is a woman in a sort of calico print blouse, rather country looking. We talk, but I do not recall the subject. I believe she is connected with a newspaper, either the Tarrant County Register or Dallas Sunrise Bulletin. I no longer work in newspapers, though I still know people in the industry. Friends from an old life, so to speak.

A passenger in a car, sitting in the front seat. We are traveling a sunken roadway, the ground sloping upward away from us. The mowers do not keep the right of way uniformly trimmed. The cleared areas are broken up by sections of tall weeds with dark seed heads. In other places, there are clumps or lines of trees.

We are entering a city. The slope of the shoulder decreases, and the right of way becomes more like a modestly sloping lawn. In front of one of the mowed areas I can see a fence and behind it a building that looks like a medieval castle. It could be a mansion, but somehow I think it is an orphanage. Perhaps a mansion turned orphanage. I laugh to think that someone who simply stood here might think this was a nice lawn leading up to this grand structure, rather than a small mowed area along a long stretch of unruly right of way.

The road bears to the left, and it is clear we are now in a town. The driver is my wife. She stops the car in the middle of the street.

“Why are we stopping here?” I ask.

“I have to stop and have some of that cornmeal!”

There is a portable, electric grist meal sitting in the back of our vehicle. She plans to grind some corn and eat it on the spot.

“We can’t just stop in the middle of the road,” I say. “We’ll get a ticket.”

But she is unconvinced.

“This is the best city in America in which to do this,” she says. We are in Highland Park.

I am nervous, looking around to monitor the traffic. So far, no appliances. I have a bag of trash on the floorboard in front of me. I’d like to get rid of it. But where?

I am still thinking that we should at least be on a side street, out of the main flow of traffic. I see one just ahead, to the right. But this would not be so safe, either, at least in terms of getting a ticket. I recall how in college I got lost once in Highland Park. I turned down a dead end street and was immediately pulled over by the police. No ticket was given, but I never forgot that the police are quite vigilant here.

Then I see a big trash truck come out of the side street. It is turning onto our street, towards us. And I see in our rearview mirror that a car is approaching from behind.

“We’re in trouble now,” I say.

But I see that the car behind us is a Mercedes, not a police car.

“We’re OK,” I add.

My wife is still in the driver’s seat, preparing to begin the grist making.

Standing on the sidewalk at my boyhood home on Cherry Street, almost at the neighbor’s house. Dad is there, along with others. There is talking, but I am not a part of the conversation. We are standing next to an old 1950s car. Is it my dad’s? Or did he buy it for me? I am not sure. Then I realize it has been transformed into an MG. But it is a strange one, too big. It looks more like one of the new retro Thunderbirds, which of course ties it back to the era of the original vehicle.

There is a boat, too. My Caravelle? I am not sure. I wish to put the boat in the barn, which I think is in the backyard. And it is – of my home in Strangers Rest. I am caught in a “space” warp, standing both on Cherry Street in front of my boyhood home and on Kaye Street, which is the side street one house away from mine in Strangers Rest. In both cases, the backyard is directly behind me. No matter. The barn is filled with junk, no room anyway. And besides, the boat cannot fit through the barn door, which is the width of a normal house door.

Going to an open house at my boyhood home on Cherry Street. My first time inside this house since we moved out when I was age 11. Standing in entry, I can hardly believe I’m back. But much has changed. The kitchen is now on the back. And it is much smaller, both plainer and darker. No windows in this kitchen, either. Strangely, I am not unduly disturbed and say as much to the real estate agent.

“I am glad the house has been updated and modified over time, maintaining its usefulness,” I say.

Next, I realize the old, open floor plan is gone. There are more rooms, but in the same footprint. And the house has been expanded upward; it is now two stories. I am upstairs, looking down on the backyard. I see the concrete patio.

“I used to play there,” I say. “Lots of memories.”

But is not the way it was when I was a boy. All we had was a small, brick stoop. Clearly, nothing is the same anymore. The past is gone; you can’t get back.

I see the face of a girl. It changes from pretty to frighteningly evil.

Driving in Duncanville, through my childhood neighborhood on the last street before the railroad tracks. I see a sign for a cross street: Third Street, which was renamed Davis Street when I was very young or even before I was born. So I know I am in the past.

I am a passenger, along for the ride. The driver takes a street to the left, which brings us to a two-story, buff brick home with a large, irregular front yard. Most of the lawn has been allowed to grow tall – perhaps a foot or more – but a narrow strip is mowed next to the house and sidewalks. I think that this is the way the homeowners have always done it.

We drive past some other houses. None of these are the type of houses that belong in Duncanville, yet they have clearly been here for decades.

At some point, I realize I am with my boss. We are riding in his old white Cadillac. We drive into a tunnel, then come out at a sort of cul de sac in front of a commercial/industrial business. This is not right; we must go back.

But somehow we have left our car at the other end.

“Do you have one of those remote buttons that will bring the car back automatically, like the Batmobile?” I ask.

This seems reasonable to me, but I know it’s not likely. And sure enough, he tells me he does not. We must walk back through the dark tunnel.

It is so dark I can’t see a thing. I am on my hands and knees, feeling my way along. I hear the squealing of the rats, which was my big fear about traveling the tunnel on foot. But they do not trouble us, and we finally reach the other end. I am surprised that it is still daylight. Because of the darkness, I thought it had become night.

We are to tour a large house, but we need one of the executive vice presidents to gain access. My boss says maybe we don’t want to wait for him. We could just skip the tour. That’s fine with me.

I look around and see lots of old ladies, apparently waiting for the tour. There are hors d’oeuvres, and I notice a couple of women are holding their voter registration cards. It occurs to me that this is their lives, dressing in proper fashion and carrying out proper civic duties like voting.

Then, off to the side, I see there is some sort of legal proceeding. It is newsworthy, involving a possible re-trial or release of a previously convicted criminal. It has the hallmarks of a DNA case, and I learn that I am to carry out the lab test that will determine his fate.

But it's not DNA. I am given some sort of clear, yellowish liquid sample (blood plasma?), which I place on the gelatin medium inside two petri dishes. I must incubate these samples. It is to be a microbiological test.

A few feet away, the road and houses are gone. I am in a sort of lab area. I find some plastic petri dish lids and put one on each dish. Next to the area with the dish covers is a door that leads to the room with the incubator. When I open it, there is a technician inside.

"Oh, you're the new guy," he says, then leaves to make room for me.

I look around. The room is the size of a large closet, packed with scientific equipment. There is barely room for one person to stand. I want to ask the man for help, tell him that I haven't touched an incubator in more than 20 years. He is standing only a few feet away, but I do not want to admit that I know nothing. I want to be the competent "new guy."

So I look around the small room, trying to identify the incubator. I see a device with a handled door on the front. Perhaps this is it. Of course, it could be the autoclave, which is a sort of pressure cooker used to sterilize, to destroy. This would be the worst sort of mistake. But I can't determine the true nature of the device for I can't get it open. I try working the handle while still holding the petri dishes. But I keep forgetting about the dishes and find that I am holding them sideways. This makes me anxious, thinking that the contents will spill out. But of course I have forgotten that the liquid has been applied to the gelatin, so there is nothing to spill.

In the parking lot of Vista Ridge Mall, where I am being pursued by Big Fat Bastard, a character from the Austin Powers movies. But he is a giant, maybe 10 feet tall. He is pursuing me sexually.

I barricade myself in an open roof enclosure, perhaps a trash receptacle area. I latch the gate, but he continues to reach through the gap between gate and fence to unlatch it. Seeing this defense is useless, I let the gate open and defend myself with a claw hammer. Each time he reaches for me I smash him on his giant forehead. But I never break the skin, and he seems no worse for the wear. All I am managing to accomplish is hold him back, keep him from grabbing me. Suddenly, he looks relaxed and turns away. Why has he given up? Then I have an idea.

"You got off, didn't you?" I ask.

"Yes," he says, smiling.

Then to show me, he turns his buttocks towards me and lifts up his shirt. He isn't wearing pants or underwear. I see that he has tucked his genitals between his legs in such a way that they protrude from behind. All I see are his testicles, which are red, almost like raw meat.

As he walks away, I say "adieu" and touch my fingertips to my lips, like a character in some old movie. Apparently, I hold no grudge. And I am not afraid. Even at 10 feet tall and with an unassailable skull, this monster is no threat.

I arrive at a desolate – perhaps abandoned – shopping center where in recent times the owners have show drive-in movies on the side of one of the buildings. A sort of mini drive-in theater. But when I get there, the movies are no more. This was apparently the last drive-in theater in the world. The end of an age. It occurs to me that I should start one. I am sure I could make it work. But I realize this is not realistic because I have no start up capital.

The 1950s drive-in image continues as two appliances line up for a drag race. One is a real hot rod, a red Model A. A little deuce coupe, courtesy of the Beach Boys. ("If she had a set of wings, man, I know she could fly.")

The other is a black sedan. I am chilled; it is the same car I saw outside my grandparent's house in Fort Jesup.

This is the race with death.

The appliances take off, the red one on the left. The black car immediately peels off to the right, leaving the race. The red coupe passes close to a parked car, loses control and flips over several times. It is a terrible accident. The car crumples up like a soft drink can and tumbles to a stop next to a building. I run to the crash scene to render assistance.

A man gets out of the wrecked car and runs towards me, apparently uninjured but understandably distraught.

"Is there anybody else in there?" I ask.

"My buddy!" he says, almost in tears.

We run to the car, and I look in what is left of the passenger side window. There is a body, horribly disfigured. There is no blood, but the side of his head and upper body looks like a cross between a slab of brown, bloodless beef and a piece of weathered lumber. The place where the eye should be looks like knothole. This person is not even the right shape to be human. He's a blob, really, like a 1950s drive-in movie space alien.

"Do you think he's dead?" I ask.

The man does not answer. Then I notice the victim is breathing. He is sitting on the driver's side of the car I don't know if he was the driver, or was simply pushed there by the crash. So I walk over to the driver's side, to get a better look.

Surprisingly, the other side of his face is virtually intact. His one good eye is closed. I turn to his friend.

"What is his name?" I ask.

"Pilly Graham."

But I realize he must mean "Billy" Graham, like the evangelist. He is a man of god.

So I speak to him, try to determine if he is conscious.

"Billy, can you hear me?"

Sure enough, the man drowsily opens his one good eye and looks my way.

"Everything's going to be OK, Billy," I say, trying to sound optimistic. But he looks terrible; his one good eye is bulging from the socket, a look of terror. I give him the double thumbs up sign.

I am wondering if he can see well enough to make out my hand signs. Indeed, my own vision begins to go double (actually triple!), but just the part of the field of vision that takes in my hands. It appears that I am seeing my hands through him.

The victim starts to close his eye again, and I fear he will go into shock and die. So I try to keep him talking.

"Billy, I'm going to pray with you now, OK?"

I am thinking I will say the Lord's Prayer, because I believe he is about to die. This is his chance to get right with God. The call to prayer gets his attention.

"What?" Billy asks in alarm.

Now he is really afraid. He understands the true gravity of his situation, poised on the edge between life and death.

"Our father, who art in Heaven..."

Today I proceed with another cacophony of incomprehensible voices. Through the Jewell Effect, I shall weave together a youth spent in the Duncanville of the 1970s with certain events that occurred in the Waco of the 1950s. Begin by manipulating the famous Waco recordings, specifically my grandfather's experiments with color photography and the tornado of 1953. We shall also explore Madison Cooper's "Sironia, Texas" (circa 1952) and certain events surrounding the lynching of an extraterrestrial in 1906. (Note: This report does not encompass the events of the psychic UFO attack on the Joy Drive-in Theater in 1952, which will be explored in a separate communication.)

On a hot, humid afternoon, a racial epithet rang out, a grisly chapter in history. The town was on fire with word of the murder and rape of a white woman. But all is not as it seems. For cohort and case-control studies have linked this story to the crash landing of an extraterrestrial nine years previous and 120 miles to the north, back in the year of 1897.

The exposure of the dying alien to the citizenry that caused its demise resulted in a psychological event of "tornadic" proportions. When humans are exposed to alien blood, psychosis inevitable occurs.

The injured totaled 597 more than could be counted. That year 1953 was too hot to touch. And it was without color. Ribbons were tied to the high cost of videotape, and it might be too hot to touch. Picture a tree with a dangling noose. The character Calvin Thaxton speaks on death, differentiation and division. These and the mad dog racism of the Fatigue Malaise (vague feeling generated by exposure to the alien blood) was the deadliest ever reported in U.S. history. It may have killed more people than all previous deaths combined. The story was gradually tracked back to the writings of Jason Mathison, an aerial clock researcher who attempted to harbor the alien. He was indicted in 30 leukemia-related deaths, though the actual death toll was considerably higher. Mathison was never again to see his three young children – not because of the legal ramifications but due to his own exposure to extraterrestrial DNA resulting in weakness and reduced exercise tolerance.

Dateline Waco, 1845: The first institution of higher learning opened on a humid afternoon. Years later, in May 1953, students at that same location would look across the street to see a lynching involving eighty-three characters in twenty-one separate, unforgettable moments. The alien was dragged through the streets, castrated and hung from a tree until its death weeks later from infection and fever of the abdominal zone. At first Mathison wouldn't talk about his radial views that the lynching was influenced by factors related to alien blood exposure. These were real people motivated by real events. To this day the story is shielded from memory by hills of fear. For this report we had to draw heavily on archives and the unimpeachable testimonies of two pastoral leaders whose names are recorded on memorial markers at the main buildings of the institution of higher learning.

Picture it: 114 people. A library blessed them for a reason. They fought the secret government for the future of all mankind. Regulation of cell death, of differentiation of social detail with the conventions of bleeding, excessive bruising, weakness. The reports were passed from extraterrestrial hands and back to white hands, which joined together like the sturdier buildings that experts say were built to withstand the disaster. Civil disobedience was employed to get the cooperation of the rising merchant class, which resisted and was therefore denied a monument to itself. This story is every bit as daunting as that infamous day in 2002 at the compound at Mount Carmel, where as more than an afterthought, according to written minutes, a collection of two spleen, lymph nodes and hands were passed through the flames to waiting extraterrestrial hands outside.

It was a day not unlike one in 1906 when defense lawyers did not so much as tip their hats to a smudge of wispy smoke from which a burning alien hurled a plea for leniency, a plea that rang out in pain and was heard across the galaxy. Infection and fever wrung out the days as he struggled to breathe. And still the alien would not die. Resentment lingered. The events are documented in an idea born of 13 Jewell Poe pictures, 35 mm slides and an 8 mm conversation that is 1,731 feet long and made cinematic history.

This is the story of an alien who confessed to murdering and raping a woman it never saw. This is the story of an alien signing a bogus confession. This is the story of a time and place that is now chained to a 1,731-page museum on Uranus, a museum commemorating the assassination of the extraterrestrial. I have walked across the studies linking exposure to alien DNA to the lawyers, who did not challenge the storm of the time. The punishments continue.

Recent reports indicate the suspected grandson of the alien was dragged from under one of the longest novels ever written. This alien/human hybrid was given a terrible choice: either activate the oncogenes or deactivate 1906. Neither you say? Then another extraterrestrial farmhand shall be accused of rape. We'll even second the motion! Color videotape, introduced in 1935 under a statue of the law goddess from more recent storms ... a time of cell death, of differentiation and the high cost of videotape and processing ... Robert and Elizabeth Barrett were among many utilizing 35 mm as a memorial, which came in 2002 where more than 80 people (search to confirm) would never hit the site of the Branch Davidian's 40 people. They may be attributed, perhaps significantly, to the directed wife, who was found in the United States and helped (I heard) until such time as the same church that held the alien for about 500 of the 4,697 mutations. These mutations may occur spontaneously, snatched from court so to speak. These mutations may occur spontaneously in an Indian tribe, too. The historic record includes a 35 mm roll videotaped during the hourlong trial. The jury of "Sironia, Texas" by Madison Cooper came back with a 1,731-page verdict. Before we can claim this as confirmed fact, I should tell you I heard her under questioning during the hourlong trial. On May 11, 1953, however, Waco was in the murder and rape of 113,000 people. Medicinal water kept in a 1953 cabinet helped citizens overcome the broader symptoms. After the lynching, the same church that yelled for blood turned their back on what they had done (but I heard tell that some of the members did later take in a sickly alien in need of shelter). The killing was a terror. The alien was stripped of his clothes and bleeding began, followed by excessive bruising. Weakness of characters and events continue for three hours, exposing the citizenry to somatic mutations in the DNA. That may be one of the reasons the aliens are still here. We're their children now.

This blood fever disrupted the regulation of bodily functions. A day after the killing 114 people were injured. The numbers mounted on a daily basis. I heard the Alien Muse cried bitterly until the site of the lynching was reduced to a leafless tree. The town was in the grip of a full-blown epidemic. Medicinal conducted in the backyard. In order to create a sense of panic and manipulate the citizenry, it is necessary to create a mysterious and unseen enemy. The MKULTRA team manufactured a story about Venusians (i.e., pirate extraterrestrials, a rogue force of hate-mongering aliens who steal through the heavens, serving Satan in an attempt to destroy our faith as the Deity's chosen ones, the keepers of His light). According to the manufactured back story they were remnants of a species that killed its own world, now a dead planet containing the ruins of a highly-intelligent species. Cosmonauts have explored these ruins and determined that the Venusians had planned to destroy the Earth with powerful psychotropic weapons. But something went wrong. They lost control over their technological achievements and destroyed their own planet in the end. The remaining Venusians left with their deadly weapon, which has now been deployed on planet Earth. They are the enemy. They killed the Deity. They are the evil ones. The Deity versus Satan. Thankfully, the scientists of the One World Government know the score. They know how to counteract the savage weapons, using the Exogrid and specially prepared medicinal waters bottled by Ozona International. They will be our salvation – if we are willing to follow their instructions and fight back against the extraterrestrial menace. We are fighting for the Deity and for His preferred religion, Americanity. It is His war. Therefore, we shall prevail.

The medical community does not understand what is happening. Often, they see this mindset as a sign of trouble that appears to arise from a disorder of the psychic pancreas. Aldolfo Morel used a mental suggestion on an atheistic doctoral candidate of the 1960s, persuading him to feel the call of saints of the Old Testament and send himself into a shroud of "Americanity." The subject raged against the Venusians, claiming they wall around our faith and thereby threatened to cause the insanity....

Are you spiritually ready? Is your family? Are people understanding this "Substitute Sacrifice"? That is the challenge in America today. We have millions set for their fulfillment! This fulfillment of which we speak is nothing less than the Second Coming as prophesized in the "El Bib" teachings of The Seventh Heaven.

First, a message to the godless liberals, abortionists and Democrats: There is no debate that 1 Thessalonians 4, and 1 Corinthians 15 teach on the Seventh Heaven! Both chapters also teach the resurrection and of the proclamation blast. Neither chapter mentions anything about having to endure your pseudoscientific babble before the Seventh Heaven comes. There is no debate that Revelation 19 and Zechariah 14 teach on the physical return of the Son of the Deity, who will be in power after the Noble Misfortune. Neither of those chapters speak of the Seventh Heaven, nor of a resurrection, nor of a proclamation blast. So get over it. Heed the Word of the Deity!

"Conspiracy of Fools: A True Story" by Kurt Eichenwald tells the sad tale of the demise of Enron. The staff of the Armageddon Drive-in have discovered interesting parallels in the story of the death of Valuosity -- and the world...

Roman Timms sloughed into the gray strata of his Luxorum 4040 TM, easing out of his reserved launching pad at the Donington condominiums. From the pad's entry point, he ascended into the main skyfare over Westover Hills, Fort Worth's wealthiest and most prestigious neighborhood.

The seven-year-old bubbletop soared past the mansions bordering the streets below, homes that testified to the immortality of the city's hydrosilicone men and corporate lords. Peeking out from behind the wrought-iron gates of the manicured estates, the congressmen visiting from Washington. A former vice chief of staff asserts his will after 4 pm. The Bubble Syndicate offers market power that comes with world influence as contained in Mijur's evil heart and a running alarm clock. They think it must be about the stories about Valuosity -- stories about how the evil corporate lords have pulled one over on the New York Agenda. But that was months ago. The Agenda was burned once. They wouldn't be so easily fooled again.

When Timms bowed out, he was celebrated at a "luau" in the hotel ballroom, or so the story goes. And what of Clark? What if his eyes go all pupil in gray cummerbunds? At least he'll be looking serious and decisive. Think JFK and a house in the country, the smell of dust, bread knife willing after 4 pm. This long-distant victory from earlier, happier times -- times that came before we got hundreds of thousands of losses in life extension credits.

We were so happy, enjoying our little day trip in the country.

We explored the treasures, the crafts, the deals. We even had sausage on a stick. And then you had to ruin it.

As we passed that car on the two-lane blacktop, I told you it had been too close to their bumper. I did not like it. And you just smiled. You smiled! It was like you thought it was funny, no big deal. Then we saw the gas station. Do we need gas? No -- no, you said. We'll just fill up as we're leaving. So, of course, I had to tell you that I HATE THAT!

Don't you know that by now, my dear one? I know you must know it. How many times have I had to tell you? So you must be doing it on purpose. First passing the car, now not getting the gas. You are therefore odious.

So you said, "OK, we'll get it now." And then you set your mouth in that hard, cruel, unfortunate way of yours, so much like a creature of the companion – a Coffin-Puntura. I always hate it that you, Coffin-Puntura, are that hateful way. You are always digging our graves, ruining our every nice thing.

Why can't you be more like me? Why can't you just enjoy our happy day?

Why can't you be happy, enjoying our little day trip in the country. We will explore the treasures, the crafts, the deals. We will even have sausage on a stick. And this time, you do not have to ruin it.

As we pass that car on the two-lane blacktop, you will not be too close to the bumper. I will like it. And you will not smile because you realize it is not a joke. It is not funny. It is a big deal. You will get it right, and I will be happy. Then we will see the gas station. Do we need gas? Yes, you will say. And you will thank me for thinking of it. We'll fill up right then. I will tell you I LOVE THAT! You do know that by now, my dear one. Clearly I know you know it. I don't have to keep saying it. Because you get it, the whole thing. First not passing the car, then getting the gas. I love that. You are therefore suitable to be my mate.

And then you set your mouth in that pleasant way of yours, so much like an ideal mate from one of my magazines. You read them, too? Ah, you are so much like me. This is wonderful. We really can enjoy our happy day!

The following classified report was leaked to the New York Agenda, which has agreed to suppress all knowledge at the request of agents working for the government/extraterrestrial conspiracy:

Growth of a Meningioma in a Transspecies Test Subject after Flouride9 Therapy – A 46-year-old human-to-insect transspecies test subject presented with severe headache and visual disturbances; clinical examination showed visual impairment, with bitemporal inferior visual-field defects, papilledema of the left eye, and optic atrophy of the right eye. The test subject, one of the first wave of Clockscan Boys, was euphoric and confused. Personality changes noted during the previous 5 months had been attributed by family members to the new alien identity of the test subject. The test subject had been taking an extraterrestrializing endocrine regimen of flouridated hormones 150 mg per day orally for the previous 6 years. After 3 years of hormone treatment, the test subject underwent a brain split for species reassignment, and flouride9 at a dose of 150 mg twice weekly administered intramuscularly was added to the test subject's therapy for the following 4 years. A cerebral magnetic resonance imaging (MRI) scan obtained 5 years before presentation to evaluate an increased prolactin level was negative. On admission, a contrast-enhanced MRI scan revealed a giant olfactory-groove meningioma. After a radical tumor resection, the histologic diagnosis was meningothelial meningioma, which was negative for alien DNA receptors, with a Nu-69 index of 6 percent and a Men in Black Index of 4.5 percent per high-power field. At a 2-year of follow-up, the test subject was continuing with the flouride9 therapy at a lower dose of 60 mg, and a contrast-enhanced MRI scan showed no recurrence of the tumor. The test subject's behavioral changes had regressed, and the visual impairments were ameliorated. Cross-species hormonal therapy is an important component of the endocrine regimen in transspecies people. Reported adverse effects in this population include venous thromboembolytic disease, breast cancer, lactotroph hyperplasia, and an increase in prolactin levels with possible growth of prolactinomas. The role of alien hormones in the development of intracranial meningioma has been proposed as one hypothesis to explain the overabundance of such tumors in cicadians. The risk of meningioma is increased among older humans who have a past history of using insecticides. In this case, a causal association between the growth of a meningioma and the flouride9 therapy was suggested by the negative cerebral MRI scan obtained 3 years before presentation. This report of abrupt growth of an intracranial meningioma after use of high doses of extraterrestrial steroid therapy in a transspecies test subject should prompt scientists working with transspecies test subjects to consider the possibility of such an event.

What more proof do we need?

American Social Broadcast recently reported on a microwave weapon that heats water molecules under the skin, cooking the enemy. The "Skin Cooker" is just one of many unique weapons believed to have been developed by our government (via MKULTRA) with the assistance of extraterrestrials.

Welcome again. Did you have a pleasant boat ride? I hope all is going well with you today. I have been thinking about you a lot since your last visit. Has it already been a week? A year?

A few weeks ago, or maybe many years, my youngest son played in a ninth grade football game against the Duncanville Panthers. Can you believe it? Our old alma mater! The stadium is at the high school now. I didn't recognize any of the campus. The old buildings have been absorbed by new ones. The new stadium isn't new anymore. Looks old, like it been there for 20 years. Maybe it has. I've lost track of time. They should never have given up the old Panther Field. It was like something out of The Last Picture Show. What was wrong with the way things used to be? It's not the DHS I remember. Or the town.

I'm sure you see D'ville regularly on visits with your parents, but I had not seen it in several years. So I took a quick dashboard tour of the Main Street and my childhood home. Oh boy. That poor little town is really hurting. Looks like it's been years since there was any maintenance or even painting in the old downtown. On Camp Wisdom Road I see the old Wolverton Air Conditioning billboard, just like I remember it. But everything else is different. Now D'ville has tattoo parlors and pawn shops. The old Duncanville Suburban office is now a Mexican food restaurant. And my childhood home, the one I lived in until age 11 -- I hardly recognize it. It was an architect-designed house built in the early 1950s. Very mid-century, with a low pitched gravel roof and an exterior clad in real redwood siding. Back in the day it was even featured in an architectural design magazine. Very unique. But somewhere along the way, perhaps 10 years ago, someone painted that gorgeous siding white. And now it's all dingy. Everything I see is dingy and old and tired looking. So sad. How could a place change so much in such a short period of time? The town is taunting me. I am in a dream. If only I can wake myself up, I'm sure I'll find everything is back like it was in 1979. I'll be in my Cutlass convertible, driving through the McDonalds, putting messages up on the town marquee (my old job!), listening to John Croslin's rock band play at the church. Looking back, I took it all for granted. I did not appreciate all the little moments of 1979. I was too busy casting ahead, making plans, waiting for the day when I could escape that boring, crappy, mediocre little town and make my way in the world.

Today I am the human equivalent of Duncanville. I'd like to think I'm in better shape than Main Street, but perhaps not. I had perfect vision in my youth, but I can't read anymore without glasses. In my hands I feel the beginnings of my father's arthritis. The plumbing doesn't work the way it used to, either. Never thought I'd see the day when the DNA delivery organ would let me down. And yet, assuming continued good health, I'm only at the midpoint of life. So much life left to live. I can't believe my sons are now in high school. I used to dream of the day the first one would leave so I could turn the empty bedroom into my office. Already I am filled with regret for all that I did not do, for all the things that I did not appreciate. Back in the day, when they were little, I would back become angry about something unimportant or just wish they would be a little more independent. They were so innocent and loving, and I didn't appreciate it. And now I'll never have their childhood again. I'm actually getting tears in my eyes thinking about. What an idiot I am. The past is taunting me. The conclusion of time is near.

Duncanville Men undergoing mid-life difficulties may be distinguished from the aliens. They belong to the city, which is their home now. Some of these men fought in Europe during the Second Earthly Conflict. That is why the city is now home to some parts of Europe, which have been relocated here from the outskirts of tomorrow. We saw this occur about 1970, when the old missile base was turned over to the city. No one knew about the history of extraterrestrials and the contamination of the soil and structures with green cicada blood contaminated with poisonous alien DNA. Soon, a malaise of mediocrity settled on the little town. Nothing was so mediocre that it could not be made worse. Tear down the old! Build new houses of sand! A vague irritability settled into the body of the Superb Suburb. Build more neighborhood retail centers. Punish our children for chewing gum in class. Don't pay any attention to that new apartment complex. Re-zone for the quick land sale. Grab what you can. Today will last forever. The future is so bright you gotta wear mid-life shades. What a crisis we have here. With the completion of nearby Joe Pool Lake, we are really poised for success. Historic buildings include the old missile base. Let's be sure to tear it all down. While driving through a park in Waco, Texas, I come upon a couple of shed-like structures. They are similar to ones that I remember photographing in college. But those were near Duncanville, and they were demolished years ago.

I suddenly realize these structures were part of the set of an old 1950s radio ranch TV show that aired in Waco. Cowboy Bob, Cowboy Joe, Cowboy Lloyd – I don't recall. Now the set is in sad shape, victims of decay and age.

Then we arrive at an old house in the same park. I am with others. We go inside. It is some sort of museum, or maybe it will be. The house is filled with old things. We look through some of them. I hold a little revolver that is made for women. It is part glass and shoots a chemical, not bullets. Then I realize it is not a museum at all, but the home of Jewell Poe, my grandfather. He was quite the pack rat and his house was a lot like a museum.

Look over there, a mummified hand, chopped off an Indian chief killed in a battle with Texas Rangers. I believe it was January 1881. For several weeks the U. S. Tenth Cavalry and the Rangers were kept busy in pursuit Victorio's band of Apaches. A small band of Apaches attacked a stagecoach in Quitman Canyon. Following the cold trail, Baylor and his Rangers tracked the Apaches down the bank of the Rio Grande and into Mexico. Along the way they found items taken from the stage. The trail turned back into Texas, where they found a fresh camp site. Following the trail into the Eagle Mountains, the Rangers came across a camp that was only hours old. Baylor's men met up with a detachment of Rangers from Lt. Nevill's company at Eagle Springs. After more tracking, the Rangers finally came upon the Indian camp. A fight ensued on the morning of January 29. The fight, though small, has come down through history as the last Indian battle in Texas. In 1885 the Ranger company was disbanded due to budget cuts.

And there are the pieces of the scalp of Kit Karger, the man who survived his own scalping thanks to the inexplicable appearance of his sister and the psychic vision of a woman friend – and his own research into time travel and silicone-chlorine bond technology. New research using a high-tech photo-chemical process has brought to reality new facts – and a new alternate timeline – regarding this amazing legend of 19th century Texas.

Consider a Wild West with alien technology, decades before the aerial clock crash landings in Aurora and Strangers Rest. Look, we can see where Kit Karger quenched his thirst by a river, his circadian-built UV protection rifle close at hand. But he didn't see the terrifying and horrifying Indians (actually human/alien hybrids) in the nearby brush. He was only altered to their presence by the psychic visions of Margaret, who transmitted her warning with wavelengths of 185 and 254 nm. She was able to calm Sarah and get her back to the transmission of UV protection between the UV lamps and the vapor-phase contaminant, which was quick to hatch. But not quick enough – Kit was hit with a blast of a scalping energy ray. It came with an agonizing pain---and then the Indians buried the three dead men. With death close by, he heard a shout and he gave out. Propping himself against the thick trunk somewhere in the range of death, Apaches swept down the bank of the Rio Grande and into Mexico. Along the way they found items taken from the stage. The trail turned back into a howling coyote wind, lifting Karger out of linear time and into a world of train whistles, a smear of red, dead shiny white, rusting marble, whiff of brimstone, a wound of agonizing pain and the burial of the three dead men. Death is close by. Hear a shout, feel the heat and a sudden cessation. He returned to farming in 1836 and participated in the Texas Revolution by providing provisions to the rebel army. He constructed a grist mill, a place of psychic contaminant, a place that was quick to hatch, though not quick enough for Kit. He fled to the Golden Nugget Mine on the morning of January 29. The Rangers from Captain Nevill's company at Eagle Springs, After more tracking, the Rangers finally skull caps, Kit ran into Big Foot Wallace in 1838, They met Propping himself against the thick trunk, a sort of museum, or maybe it will be, the house is filled with old things, we look through some with wavelengths of 185 and 254 nm, She was able to calm Sarah and get her back to the transmission of UV protection beehive-shaped homes of us during daylight, Suddenly, Canyon, Following the cold trail, Baylor across a blackened maw, a low, pitiful moan, wiry, wizened, skeleton, dark deep-set eyes, hawk-bill by, hear a shout and give out, Propping himself against the thick trunk, a sort of museum, or maybe it will be, the house a ghastly sight seen vividly in a dream of Karger naked, he built but did not finish a belted and pulley-type generator motor, And of course, there were his investigations into filly arrives, disappointed to find that this particular cowboy is really no more than a ball of sticks, dreaming of a carrot that shave with a two-bit card shark, beefy, barrel-chested man with close cropped chestnut man with close cropped chestnut he wore caps of soft over the shriveled fingers through hoof prints and wagon ruts, wiping a dirty hand across a tale, Doctors were not of much assistance to Kit, In time, the skin rotted away and the skull bone became diseased, His brain was tone makes the nightmare angry, knocks him to the cowboy from the fence and stomps him into a pile of splinters, meanwhile back at was quite the sudden cessation of psychic dissection, face blazing, grin splits the sky and fades, a vast crystal rusty, weed-grown tracks explode in a splash of crimson, fading into the inky blackness of space, stagnant memories, sharp smell of a sawed-off blaster, we have stated the stallion, lassos the unsuspecting beast, sells him to a traveling circus, where they geld him and make him spend I believe it was January 1881, For several weeks the U.
